1. The right of review, by this court, of the judgments of the circuit courts, by bill of exceptions and writ of error, is limited to questions of law appearing on the face of the record, and does not extend to matters of fact or discretion.

2. Questions of law arising from the trial of an issue of fact cannot be made part of the record by bill of exceptions, unless the trial is by jury, or by the court after due waiver in writing of a jury trial.

3. When the trial is by rule of court and consent of parties before a referee or arbitrator, no question of law can be reviewed on error, except whether the facts found by him support the judgment below.

4. Where the pleadings present issues of fact, triable by a jury only, and there is no waiver of a jury trial, but the case is tried, by consent of the parties, before the judge at chambers, such trial is neither a trial by jury, nor a trial by the court, but a trial by the judge as a referee, and the bill of exceptions allowed at such trial is irregular, and the facts and rulings stated therein cannot be regarded or reviewed by this court.

5. In such case, where the questions argued by the plaintiff in error do not appear of record independently of the bill of exceptions, this court has no authority to pass upon them.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff upon coupons of bonds of the Town of Andes. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

Albert Slauson brought two actions against the Town of Andes in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York, alleging in the complaint in each action that he was a citizen of the State of New Jersey and the defendant was a municipal corporation of the State of New York; that the defendant subscribed to the stock of the Delhi and Middletown Railroad Company, and issued its bonds, with coupons for interest annexed, in payment thereof, in accordance with the law of New York of 1869, chapter 907; and that certain of those coupons passed into the possession and became the property of the plaintiff in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and payment thereof was duly demanded at maturity and refused. The amount for which judgment was asked in the first action was $2,709 and interest, and in the second action $2,044 and interest.

In the answer to each complaint, the defendant admitted that it was a municipal corporation of the State of New York, but denied all the other allegations of the complaint, and alleged that the coupons sued on were in fact the property of citizens of New York, in whose behalf and for whose benefit the action was prosecuted; that at the time of its commencement an action was pending in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, brought by residents and taxpayers of the defendant town against the holders of the bonds and coupons, to restrain their transfer and collection, on the ground that they were illegal and void; and that if the plaintiff held any of the coupons he took them without consideration, and for the purpose of avoiding and nullifying the effect of any judgment that might be recovered in that court, and of enabling him to bring an tion in the Circuit Court of the United States.

The subsequent proceedings, as shown by the record transmitted to this court, were as follows:

1st. An order, filed June 18, 1884, for trial before the District Judge at chambers, in these words:

"At a stated term of the Circuit Court of the United States of America for the Northern District of New York, in the Second Circuit, held at Canandaigua, on the 18th day of June, A. D. 1884.

"Present: The Honorable A. C. Coxe, Judge.

"Albert Slauson against The Town of Andes. No. 2512.

"Albert Slauson against The Town of Andes. No. 2513.

"These actions having been each moved for trial on the part of the plaintiffs therein at this term of court, and application for a postponement having been made on behalf of the defendant, it is now, at the suggestion of the court and by consent of parties, ordered that the said actions pass said term, and be tried before Hon. A. C. Coxe, at his chambers at Utica, without a jury, with the same force and effect as if tried at a circuit term of this court, such trial to be had within two weeks after the first day of September next, at a time to be fixed by the judge, unless the parties shall agree; and if it shall appear to said judge upon such trial that there are questions of fact arising upon the issues therein, the same are to be submitted to a jury at the November Term, provided the said questions of fact are of such a character that the judge would submit them to a jury if one were present; and that no further notice of trial is required. ALFRED C. COXE."

2d. and 3d. Two orders, each entitled "At a stated term of the Circuit Court for the Northern District of New York, held at Utica on October 1, 1884, Present Hon. A. C. Coxe, Judge," and signed by him, and reciting the trial of the two actions together by consent of parties before him at his chambers in Utica—the one, an order filed November 15, 1884, for the consolidation of the two actions; and the other, an order filed December 4, 1884, by which the judge made a general finding for the plaintiff upon the facts, and found that in the consolidated action there was due to the plaintiff from the defendant the sum of $5,316.46 (being the aggregate of the sums due in both actions at the day of trial, October 1, 1884), with interest, and directing judgment for the plaintiff accordingly, with costs.

4th. The judgment of the court, enrolled and signed by the clerk December 13, 1884, by which, after reciting the bringing of the two actions, the order and stipulation of June 18, 1884, the trial of the actions accordingly before the judge on October 1, 1884, the order of consolidation, and the judge's finding as aforesaid, it was adjudged that the plaintiff recover of the defendant the said sum of $5,316.46, with interest from the day of trial, amounting to $64.68, and costs taxed at $260.70, amounting in the aggregate to $5,641.84.

5th. A bill of exceptions, signed and sealed by the judge October 13, 1885, and filed October 21, 1885, referring to the order of June 18, 1884, and stating that the actions were afterwards brought on for trial together by consent of parties before the judge, without a jury, at his chambers in Utica, on October 1, 1884; setting forth in full the evidence introduced by both parties at the trial; and stating that the defendant excepted to the admission of specific portions of the plaintiff's evidence, and asked permission under the stipulation and order of June 18, 1884, to submit to a jury the questions of good faith and of the collusive transfer of the coupons in suit and of the ownership thereof, and that the motion was denied, and exception taken by the defendant to the denial, as well as to the judge's final decision, order and finding.

6th. The opinion of the judge in favor of the plaintiff, endorsed "Decision. Filed November 12, 1884."

The defendant sued out this writ of error.

Mr. I. H. Maynard, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant is not a bona fide holder of the bonds and coupons in suit.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The authority of this court to review the judgments of the circuit court by bill of exceptions and writ of error is regulated exclusively by the Acts of Congress and the practice of the courts of the United States without regard to the statutes of the State or the practice of its courts. Chateaugay Co. Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544 [ante, 508]. The right of review is limited to questions of law appearing on the face of the record, and does not extend to matters of fact or of discretion; questions of law arising upon the trial of an issue of fact cannot be made part of the record by bill of exceptions, unless the trial is by jury, or by the court after due waiver in writing of a jury trial; and when the trial is by rule of court and consent of parties before a referee or arbitrator, no question of law can be reviewed on error, except whether the facts found by him support the judgment below. Campbell v. Boyreau, 62 U. S. 21 How. 223 [16: 96]; Bond v. Dustin, 112 U. S. 604, 606 [28: 835]; Paine v. Central Vermont R. Co. 118 U. S. 152 [30: 193].

In the present case, there was no demurrer, or case stated, or special verdict, or finding of facts by the court or by a referee, presenting a pure question of law. But the pleadings presented issues of fact which, in the legal and regular course of proceeding, could be tried by a jury only, and at a stated term of the court, unless the parties either in writing waived a jury and submitted the case to the court's decision, or else agreed that the case should be tried and determined by a referee. There was no waiver of a jury trial and submission of the determination of all issues of fact to the court. But the case was tried by consent of the parties before the judge at chambers under an order providing that it should be so tried, and that "If it shall appear to the judge upon such trial that there are questions of fact arising upon the issues therein, of such a character that the judge would submit them to the jury if one were present," they should be submitted to a jury at the next term of the court; and the only finding of the judge was a general finding for the plaintiff.

The trial thus ordered, consented to and had, was neither a trial by jury, nor a trial by the court, in accordance with the Acts of Congress, but was a trial by the judge as a referee. The trial deriving its whole efficacy from the consent of the parties, the bill of exceptions allowed at that trial was irregular and unavailing, and the facts stated in that bill of exceptions cannot be regarded, nor the rulings stated therein reviewed, by this court. As the questions argued by the plaintiff in error do not appear of record independently of the bill of exceptions, this court has no authority to pass upon them, and no error is shown in the judgment afterwards rendered by the circuit court. Campbell v. Boyreau, above cited; Lyons v. Lyons Bank, 19 Blatchf. 279.

Judgment affirmed.

J. FRIEDLANDER ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
THE TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 416-426.)

Railroad company not bound by bill of lading issued by its agent for goods not shipped—common carrier, when not liable—company not estopped to deny agent's act—not company's agent—rights of innocent assignee.

1. The agent of a railroad company at one of its stations cannot bind the company by the execution of a bill of lading for goods not actually placed in his possession, and by its delivery to a person fraudulently pretending, in collusion with such agent, that he had shipped such goods, in favor of a party without notice, with whom, in furtherance of the fraud, the pretended shipper negotiates a draft, with the false bill of lading attached.

2. No recovery can be had against a common carrier for goods never actually in its possession for transportation because one of its agents, having authority to sign bills of lading, by collusion with another person, issues the document in the absence of any goods.

3. The company, under such circumstances, is not estopped from denying that it had clothed such agent with apparent authority to do an act outside the scope of his employment and of its own business; the agent was not the company's agent in the transaction.

4. Although fraud, perpetrated through the device of a false bill of lading, may work injury to an innocent party, this cannot be redressed by a change of victim.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, to review a judgment for defendant in an action to recover for the nondelivery of goods named in an alleged bill of lading of which the plaintiffs were assignees for value. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

Friedlander & Co. brought suit in the District Court of Texas, in and for the County of Galveston, against the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, to recover for the nondelivery of certain cotton named in an alleged bill of lading hereinafter described, of which they claimed to be assignees for value, their petition, after counting upon said bill of lading, thus continuing:

"That the said defendant, fraudulently contriving to avoid its liability to these plaintiffs, pretends and alleges that the said cotton was not so delivered as in and by said bill of lading is recited and acknowledged, but that the said bill of lading was executed without the receipt by its said agent of any of said cotton, all of which said pretenses on the part of the defendant, plaintiffs allege are untrue; but they say that even if it be true that no cotton was delivered to said defendant as in and by said bill of lading is recited and acknowledged, yet is the defendant estopped from setting up that fact in defense of plaintiff's cause of action upon said bill of lading, because these plaintiffs say that the said bill of lading was executed in form negotiable and transferable by indorsement under the usage and customs of merchants and that these plaintiffs, relying upon the validity of said bill of lading in all respects and upon the facts therein stated, that said cotton had been delivered to said defendant as aforesaid, and that defendant had contracted to carry and deliver said cotton as aforesaid, advanced to the said Joseph Lahnstein and paid out upon his order and at his request and in consideration of his said transfer of said bill of lading to these plaintiffs the sum of eight thousand dollars on, to wit, the 10th day of November, 1883, and that said payment was made and advanced upon the faith of the recitals and effect of said bill of lading as a contract to deliver the cotton therein mentioned as aforesaid, and that if the said cotton was never received by defendant, yet ought it to be held to the terms of the said bill of lading for the indemnification of these plaintiffs for said payment, with interest thereon from the date thereof, because of the fraud practiced by the said agent upon these plaintiffs in the issuance of said bill of lading in the ordinary form and manner wherein he was authorized by the defendant to act, and defendants are estopped to deny that said cotton was received as against the claims of these plaintiffs for damages on account of defendant's failure to comply with said bill of lading to the extent of eight thousand dollars, with interest thereon, at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, from the date of payment thereof as aforesaid; and if it be true, as alleged, that defendant received said cotton in said bill of lading mentioned, then plaintiffs claim of defendant the full value thereof, to wit, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, with interest thereon from and after the 6th day of December, 1883, when and before which time defendant should have delivered said cotton under said bill of lading, according to the true intent and meaning thereof."

Defendant demurred, and also answered, denying "all and singular the allegations in the petition contained." The case was subsequently removed to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Texas, whereupon by leave the defendant amended its answer by adding these further averments:

"That one E. D. Easton, on the 6th of November, 1883, was the station agent of defendant at Sherman Station, in Grayson County, Texas, on the Eastern Division of defendant's line in Texas, and that as such agent he was authorized to receive cotton and other freight for transportation and to execute bills of lading for such cotton and other freight by him received for the purpose of transportation by defendant.

"That on the said 6th day of November, 1883, the said Easton, combining and confederating with one Joseph Lahnstein, did fraudulently and collusively sign a certain bill of lading purporting to be his act as agent of defendant, whereby he falsely represented that defendant had received from the said Joseph Lahnstein two hundred bales of cotton in apparent good order, to be transported from Sherman to New Orleans, La., and did deliver the said false bill of lading to the said Joseph Lahnstein; and defendant says that in point of fact the said bill of lading was executed by the said Easton fraudulently and collusively with the said Lahnstein without receiving any cotton for transportation, such as was represented in said bill of lading, and without the expectation on the part of the said Easton of receiving any such cotton; that the said pretended bill of lading was the one that is set out in the petition of the plaintiffs and was false, fraudulent, and fictitious, and was not executed by defendant nor by its authority, and that the said Easton only had authority as agent aforesaid to execute and deliver bills of lading for freights actually received by him for transportation."

The cause was submitted to the court for trial, a jury being waived, upon the following agreed statement of facts:

"1st. On November 16th, 1883, at Sherman Station, in Grayson County, Texas, on the Eastern Division of the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, E. D. Easton, agent for the defendant at said station, executed as such agent a bill of lading, of which a copy is hereinafter given, and delivered the same to Joseph Lahnstein, the person named in said bill of lading.

"2d. That said Easton was at the time and place aforesaid the regularly authorized agent of the defendant for the purpose of receiving for shipment cotton and other freight for transportation by defendant over and along its line from Sherman Station aforesaid, and that said bill of lading was in the usual form and made out upon the usual printed blanks in use by said defendant at said station, and that said Easton was authorized by said defendant to execute bills of lading for cotton and other freight by him received for the purpose of transportation by the defendant.

"3d. That the said Joseph Lahnstein indorsed said bill of lading by writing his name across the back thereof and drew a draft on the plaintiffs in this cause on or about November 6th, 1883 (of which draft a copy is hereinafter given), for the sum of eight thousand dollars, payable at sight to the order of Oliver & Griggs, and attached said draft to said bill of lading so indorsed, and on or about Nov. 6th, 1883, forwarded the same through said Oliver & Griggs for presentation to and payment by the plaintiffs in this cause; that in due course of business Oliver & Griggs forwarded said draft, with bill of lading attached, to New Orleans, where the same was presented to and paid by plaintiffs on or about November 10th, 1883.

"4th. That in paying said draft said plaintiffs acted in good faith and in the usual course of their business as commission merchants making advances upon shipments of cotton to them for sale, and without any knowledge of any fraud or misrepresentation connected with said bill of lading and draft, and with the full and honest belief that said bill of lading and draft were honestly and in good faith executed, and that the cotton mentioned in said bill of lading had been in fact received by said defendant as represented in said bill of lading.

"5th. That plaintiffs had previously paid one or more drafts upon similar bills of lading, signed by the said Easton as agent aforesaid, for cotton shipped them by said Joseph Lahnstein, for sale by plaintiffs as commission merchants for account of said Joseph Lahnstein, and that the cotton so previously advanced upon was received by plaintiffs in the due course of transportation, pursuant to the terms of the bills of lading upon which they made advances respectively, and the bill of lading of November 6th, 1883, was the first received by plaintiffs from said Lahnstein and not fulfilled by defendant.

"6th. That, in point of fact, said bill of lading of November 6th, 1883, was executed by said E. D. Easton fraudulently and by collusion with said Lahnstein and without receiving any cotton for transportation, such as is represented in said bill of lading, and without the expectation on the part of the said Easton of receiving any such cotton; that said Easton and said Lahnstein had fraudulently combined in one other case, whereby said Easton signed and delivered to the said Lahnstein a similar bill of lading for three hundred bales of cotton which had not been received, and which the said Easton had no expectation of receiving, the latter named bill of lading having been given early in November, 1883, but that plaintiffs in this suit had no knowledge whatever of the facts stated in this (sixth) clause until after they had in good faith paid and advanced upon the bill of lading sued on and the draft thereto attached, to them presented as aforesaid, the sum of $8,000.00, as hereinbefore stated.

"7th. That the cotton mentioned in said bill of lading (of November 6th, 1883), had the same been actually received by defendant and forwarded to plaintiffs, would have been worth largely more than the amount so advanced by said plaintiffs as aforesaid—that is to say, would have been worth about $10,000.00, and that, except that the cotton was not received nor expected to be received by said agent when said bill of lading was by him executed as aforesaid, the transaction was, from first to last, customary and in the usual course of trade, and in accordance with the usage and customs of merchants and shippers and receivers of cotton.

"8th. That on said November 6th, 1883, and long prior thereto and ever since, the headquarters and main offices of defendant were and have been connected by railroad and telegraph communication with all stations on defendant's railroad and with Sherman Station aforesaid, among others.

"9th. That the defendant is a corporation created and existing and domiciled as alleged in the petition.

"10th. That on November 10th, 1883, said Joseph mentioned above was insolvent, and that he has been insolvent ever since and is so now."

Then follows bill of lading, indorsed by Lahnstein and with draft on Friedlander & Co. for $8,000 attached, acknowledging the receipt from Joseph Lahnstein of "two hundred bales of cotton in apparent good order, marked and numbered as below, to be transported from Sherman to New Orleans, La., and delivered to the consignees or a connecting common carrier," and proceeding in the usual form, Lahnstein being named as consignee, and directions given "Notify J. Friedlander & Co., New Orleans, La." The circuit court found for the defendant, and judgment was rendered accordingly, and writ of error thereupon brought to this court.

Upon the argument certain parts of the statutes of the State of Texas were cited, with especial reference to the provision as to common carriers "that the trip or voyage shall be considered as having commenced from the time of the signing of bill of lading." The question of active fraud or collusion upon the part of the agent in issuing the bill of lading is not material, and in no wise interferes with the application of the general rule to this case.

Balt. & O. R. Co. v. Wilkens, 44 Md. 11; Robinson v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 9 Fed. Rep. 129; Coleman v. Riches, 29 Eng. L. & Eq. 328; The Freeman v. Buckingham, 59 U. S. 18 How. 182 (15: 341); Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7 (26: 998).

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The agreed statement of facts sets forth "that in point of fact said bill of lading of November 6, 1883, was executed by said E. D. Easton fraudulently and by collusion with said Lahnstein, and without receiving any cotton for transportation such as is represented in said bill of lading, and without the expectation on the part of the said Easton of receiving any such cotton;" and it is further said that Easton and Lahnstein had fraudulently combined in another case, whereby Easton signed and delivered to Lahnstein a similar bill of lading for cotton "which had not been received, and which the said Easton had no expectation of receiving;" and also "that, except that the cotton was not received nor expected to be received by said agent when said bill of lading was by him executed as aforesaid, the transaction was from first to last customary." In view of this language, the words "for transportation, such as is represented in said bill of lading," cannot be held to operate as a limitation. The inference to be drawn from the statement is that no cotton whatever was delivered for transportation to the agent at Sherman Station. The question arises, then, whether the agent of a railroad company at one of its stations can bind the company by the execution of a bill of lading for goods not actually placed in his possession, and its delivery to a person fraudulently pretending, in collusion with such agent, that he had shipped such goods in favor of a party without notice, with whom, in furtherance of the fraud, the pretended shipper negotiates a draft with the false bill of lading attached. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are representatives of money, circulating in the commercial world as such, and it is essential, to enable them to perform their peculiar functions, that he who purchases them should not be bound to look beyond the instrument, and that his right to enforce them should not be defeated by anything short of bad faith on his part. But bills of lading answer a different purpose and perform different functions. They are regarded as so much cotton, grain, iron or other articles of merchandise, in that they are symbols of ownership of the goods they cover. And as no sale of goods lost or stolen, though to a bona fide purchaser for value, can devest the ownership of the person who lost them or from whom they were stolen, so the sale of the symbol or mere representative of the goods can have no such effect, although it sometimes happens that the true owner, by negligence, has so put it into the power of another to occupy his position ostensibly as to estop him from asserting his right as against a purchaser, who has been misled to his hurt by reason of such negligence. Shaw v. Railroad Co. [Merchants Nat. Bank], 101 U. S. 557, 563 [25: 892, 893]; Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7, 8 [26: 998, 999]; Gurney v. Behrend, 3 El. & Bl. 633, 634. It is true that while not negotiable, as commercial paper is, bills of lading are commonly used as security for loans and advances, but it is only as evidence of ownership, special or general, of the property mentioned in them, and of the right to receive such property at the place of delivery.

Such being the character of a bill of lading, can a recovery be had against a common carrier for goods never actually in its possession for transportation, because one of its agents, having authority to sign bills of lading, by collusion with another person, issues the document in the absence of any goods at all?

It has been frequently held by this court that the master of a vessel has no authority to sign a bill of lading for goods not actually put on board the vessel, and, if he does so, his act does not bind the owner of the ship, even in favor of an innocent purchaser. The Freeman v. Buckingham, 59 U. S. 18 How. 182, 191 [15: 341, 345]; The Lady Franklin, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 325 [19: 455]; Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7 [26: 998.] And this agrees with the rule laid down by the English courts. Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 77; Grant v. Norway, 10 C. B. 665; Cox v. Bruce, L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 147. "The receipt of the goods," said Mr. Justice Miller, in Pollard v. Vinton, supra, "lies at the foundation of the contract to carry and deliver. If no goods are actually received, there can be no valid contract to carry or to deliver." "And the doctrine is applicable to transportation contracts made in that form by railway companies and other carriers by land, as well as carriers by sea," as was said by Mr. Justice Matthews in Iron Mountain Railway v. Knight, 122 U. S. 79, 87 [30: 1077, 1080], he adding also: "If Potter (the agent) had never delivered to the plaintiff in error any cotton at all to make good the 525 bales called for by the bills of lading, it is clear that the plaintiff in error would not be liable for the deficiency.

This is well established by the cases of The Freeman v. Buckingham, 59 U. S. 18 How. 182 [15: 341], and Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7 [26: 998.]"

It is a familiar principle of law that where one of two innocent parties must suffer by the fraud of another, the loss should fall upon him who enabled such third person to commit the fraud; but nothing that the railroad company did or omitted to do can be properly said to have enabled Lahnstein to impose upon Friedlander & Co. The company not only did not authorize Easton to sign fictitious bills of lading, but it did not assume authority itself to issue such documents except upon the delivery of the merchandise. Easton was not the company's agent in the transaction, for there was nothing upon which the agency could act. Railroad companies are not dealers in bills of exchange, nor in bills of lading; they are carriers only, and held to rigid responsibility as such. Easton, disregarding the object for which he was employed, and not intending by his act to execute it, but wholly for a purpose of his own and of Lahnstein, became particeps criminis with the latter in the commission of the fraud upon Friedlander & Co.; and it would be going too far to hold the company, under such circumstances, estopped from denying that it had clothed this agent with apparent authority to do an act so utterly outside the scope of his employment and of its own business. The defendant cannot be held on contract as a common carrier in the absence of goods, shipment and shipper; nor is the action maintainable on the ground of tort. "The general rule," said Willes, J., in Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Exch. 259, "is that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved." See also Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. 1 Hurl. & C. 526. The fraud was in respect to a matter within the scope of Easton's employment or outside of it. It was not within it, for bills of lading could only be issued for merchandise delivered; and being without it, the company, which derived and could derive no benefit from the unauthorized and fraudulent act, cannot be made responsible. British Mut. Banking Co. v. Charnwood Forest R. Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 714.

The law can punish roguery, but cannot always protect a purchaser from loss, and so fraud perpetrated through the device of a false bill of lading may work injury to an innocent party, which cannot be redressed by a change of victim.

Under the Texas statutes the trip or voyage commences from the time of the signing of the bill of lading issued upon the delivery of the goods; and thereunder the carrier cannot avoid his liability as such, even though the goods are not actually on their passage at the time of a loss; but these provisions do not affect the result here.

We cannot distinguish the case in hand from those heretofore decided by this court, and in consonance with the conclusions therein announced this judgment must be affirmed.

Duty on beans—commercial designation—common designation.

1. Beans, as the term is used in the Customs Duties Act, are not garden seeds, but may be included under the term "vegetables."
2. The commercial designation is the first and most important designation to be ascertained in settling the meaning and application of the tariff laws.
3. But if the commercial designation fails to give an article its proper place in the classifications of the law, then resort must necessarily be had to the common designation; and evidence may be given to prove it.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought by the defendants in error against the Collector of New York, to recover an alleged excess of duties on goods imported. The goods referred to were white beans, upon which the collector levied a duty of twenty per cent ad valorem, as garden seeds. This charge was paid under protest, the plaintiffs insisting that the article was exempt from duty under the free list, as seeds "not otherwise provided for," or, if not free, they were only dutiable at ten per cent, as "vegetables." The Treasury Department finally conceded that the beans did not properly come under the denomination of "garden seeds," and directed ten per cent to be refunded, but still insisted that they are liable to a duty of ten per cent, as "vegetables," in the general category of "articles of food." The plaintiffs adhere to their first position that beans are free of duty, as seeds "not otherwise provided for;" and that is the only question here presented.

The clauses of the law which are to be construed in determining the controversy are to be found in the last Customs Duties Act, passed March 3, 1883, as a substitute for Title XXXIII of the Revised Statutes. Among the various schedules attached to this Act, classifying the articles subject to, or free from, import duties, is one entitled "Provisions," in which are enumerated, amongst other things, beef and pork, cheese, butter, lard, wheat, rye, barley, indian corn, oats, meal, flour, potato or corn starch, rice, hay, different kinds of fish, pickles, potatoes, vegetables in their natural state, or in salt or brine, not specifically enumerated or provided for in this Act, vegetables prepared or preserved, currants, dates, fruits of various kinds, almonds, walnuts, peanuts, etc. Beans are not mentioned specifically in this list. If they are properly classed under the term "vegetables in their natural state," they are subject to a duty of ten per cent, as contended for by the Government.

Under the head of "Free List—Sundries," we find amongst a great number of other miscellaneous articles, the following: "Plants, trees, shrubs, and vines of all kinds not otherwise provided for, and seeds of all kinds, except medicinal seeds, not specially enumerated or provided for in this Act." If the white beans imported by the plaintiffs are properly to be classified as "seeds," then they are free from all duty, as claimed by the plaintiffs.

Schedule N, entitled "Sundries," contains a list of miscellanous articles (many of them articles of manufacture), subject to various rates of duty. The following is one of the items of this schedule: "Garden seeds, except seed of the sugar beet, 20 per cent ad valorem." If white beans are to be classed as "garden seeds" then the original decision of the collector was right. This decision, however, has been abandoned, and we think very properly. Although beans are often planted in gardens as seed, yet, as a product, and a commodity in the market, they are not generally denominated as "garden seeds," any more than potatoes, which are also sometimes planted as seed in gardens. The same consideration also applies in regard to the use of the more general term "seeds. We do not see why they should be classified as seeds any more than walnuts should be so classified. Both are seeds in the language of botany or natural history, but not in commerce nor in common parlance.

On the other hand, in speaking generally of provisions, beans may well be included under the term "vegetables." As an article of food on our tables, whether baked or boiled, or forming the basis of soup, they are used as a vegetable, as well when ripe as when green. This is the principal use to which they are put. Beyond the common knowledge which we have on this subject, very little evidence is necessary, or can be produced. But on the trial, the parties deemed it important to introduce a great deal of testimony. The court, however, did not allow the defendant to prove the common designation of beans as an article of food. It was shown by the evidence that beans are generally sold and dealt in, under the simple designation of "beans;" but that does not solve the question as between the rival designations of "seeds" and "vegetables." The common designation as used in every-day life, when beans are used as food (which is the great purpose of their production), would have been very proper to be shown in the absence of further light from commercial usage. We think that the evidence on this point ought to have been admitted. In addition to this, the court told the jury that "The commercial designation of the article, or what the article is called in trade and commerce, or the name bean, has nothing to do with the question." We think the court erred in this instruction. The commercial designation, as we have frequently decided, is the first and most important designation to be ascertained in settling the meaning and application of the tariff laws. See Arthur v. Lahey, 96 U. S. 112, 118 [24:766, 768]; Barber v. Schell, 107 U. S. 617, 623 [27: 490, 492]; Worthington v. Abbott, 124 U. S. 434, 436 [31:494, 495]; Arthur's Executors v. Butterfield, 125 U. S. 70, 75 [31:643, 645]. But if the commercial designation fails to give an article its proper place in the classifications of the law, then resort must necessarily be had to the common designation. We think, therefore, that the court erred both in its charge and in the exclusion of the evidence offered; especially as, without any evidence, and with the common knowledge which we all possess, the court might almost have been justified in directing a verdict for the defendant.

We have not adverted to a clause of the Customs Act in which beans are specifically named, because we do not think it applies to the case. We refer to that clause of the free list which enumerates "drugs, barks, beans, berries, etc., any of the foregoing of which are not edible and are in a crude state." As this clause refers to articles "not edible," it cannot include beans of the character now under consideration.

Nor have we thought it necessary to refer particularly to the case of Ferry v. Livingston, 115 U. S. 542 [29:489], in which the clauses of the law respecting "garden seeds" in Schedule N, and "seeds of all kinds" in the free list are elaborately discussed and commented on. There the question was between "garden seeds" and "field seeds," and the decision depended on the particular circumstances of the case. The opinion concludes with this declaration: "As this case rests for decision on the facts found, it is not possible for this court to lay down any general rules which will apply to cases differing in their facts from this case." We regard our present decision as in harmony with the decision in that case; and only refer to it for the purpose of disclaiming any intention to dissent from it.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause remanded with instructions to order a new trial.

UNITED STATES, Appt.
v.
ADAM BADEAU.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 439-452.)

Compensation for two offices—retired army officer not entitled to pay, while consul—money paid when not recoverable.

1. A person holding two offices or employments under the government, when the services rendered or which might be required under them, were not incompatible, is not precluded from receiving the salary or compensation of both.
2. Under the Act of 1875, retired officers of the army, situated as therein described, are not held, if they accept or hold diplomatic or consular appointment, to have resigned their places in the army; but they are not entitled to pay as army officers when they are absent from their country in the discharge of continuous official duties inconsistent with military service. Such officers, when in the diplomatic or consular service, cannot receive double compensation.
3. Where an officer of the army was paid, as such, for time during the intervals of his employment in a diplomatic or consular capacity, being an officer de facto if not de jure, the moneys so paid to him cannot be recovered back by the United States.

Submitted Jan. 4, 1889. Decided April 15, 1889.

CROSS Appeals from judgment of the Court of Claims, dismissing the petition of the claimant and the counterclaim of the United States; the claim being for pay and allowances of a captain retired from active service while being Consul-General at London and also at Havana; and the counterclaim being for moneys paid him for salary as an army officer during the same time. Affirmed.

Reported below, 21 Ct. Cl. 48.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

On the 21st day of June, 1883 the Secretary of the Treasury, pursuant to section 1063 of the Revised Statutes, and in compliance with the certificate of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitted to the Court of Claims the claim of Adam Badeau for pay as an officer of the United States Army, "together with all the vouchers, papers, documents, and proofs pertaining thereto, that the same might be proceeded in, in said court, as if originally commenced therein by the voluntary action of the claimant;" and thereafter upon the 19th day of February, 1884, the claimant filed his petition in which, after making certain averments, and stating that he was secretary of legation at London from May 19 to December 6, 1869, and Consul-General at London April 28, 1870, to September 16, 1881, and at Havana, Cuba, from November 25, 1882, to the date of the filing of the petition, and that he had received pay as a military officer from December 6, 1869, to April 30, 1870, and from September 16, 1881, to November 25, 1882, he claimed to be entitled to "the amount of pay and allowances of a captain, mounted, retired from active service, for the period from April 28, 1870, to September 16, 1881, and from November 25, 1882, up to the present time, amounting to the sum of eighteen thousand eight hundred and fifty-two dollars and sixty-five cents, not having received such pay or allowances during said period; also, to the additional pay and allowance provided by section 1262 of the Revised Statutes, which section is as follows:

"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, ten per centum of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service."

A general traverse was filed by the United States, March 8, 1884, and on the 10th of February, 1885, a counterclaim, stating "that Adam Badeau, the claimant in the above entitled cause, before and at the time of the commencement of this suit was, and still is, indebted to the said defendants in a large sum of money, to wit, two thousand five hundred and sixty dollars and ten cents ($2,560.10), for money erroneously paid to said Badeau without authority of law, the same being on account of payments of salary made to him as an army officer (captain, retired), from December 31, 1869, to October 31, 1882, during all of which time said Badeau was not in fact in the army nor an officer thereof;" to which the claimant filed a replication March 9, 1885.

The United States also pleaded the Statute of Limitations to the larger part of petitioner's claim.

Findings of fact and conclusions of law were announced by the Court of Claims, May 9, 1887, as follows:

I. On the 21st April, 1869, the claimant, then being a first lieutenant of infantry in the Army of the United States, unassigned, was appointed by the President assistant secretary of legation at London. On the 19th May, 1869, he accepted the appointment, filed in the Department of State his oath of office, and embarked for his post, reaching England May 31st, 1869.

II. On the 15th May, 1869, a military board was convened by the following order:

[Special Orders, No. 116.—Extract.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GEN'L'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 15, 1869.

12. By direction of the President, a board of officers will assemble in New York City at 12 M. on the 18th inst., or as soon thereafter as practicable, for the examination of Bvt. Brig. General Adam Badeau, 1st lieutenant U. S. Army, for retirement, in pursuance of the Act of Congress of the 3d of August, 1861. . . .

Upon completion of the examination of General Badeau the president of the board will dissolve the board and order the officers composing the same to resume their proper duties.

* * * * * *

By command of Gen'l Sherman.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

The board met in New York on the 18th May, 1869, and the following proceedings took place:

NEW YORK, May 18th, 12 M.

The board met pursuant to above order. Owing to the illness and consequent absence of Gen'l Reeve the board adjourned.

NEW YORK, May 18th, 4 p. m.

The following telegram was received:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18th.

General McDOWELL, New York City:

By direction of the Secretary of War, General Rufus Ingalls is detailed as a member of the retiring board, vice Reeve.

Acknowledge receipt.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

On receipt of the above telegraphic order the board reconvened.

Present all the members and the recorder.

The board proceeded to consider the case of 1st Lieut. Adam Badeau, bvt. brig. gen'l U. S. A., who appeared before the board, and having heard the orders convening it read, was asked if he objected to any member named in the orders. He having no objection, the board was duly sworn in his presence by the recorder, and the recorder by the president. . . . The board was cleared, and after mature deliberation find "that 1st Lieutenant Adam Badeau, U. S. Infantry, bvt. brig. general U. S. A., is incapacitated for active service, and that said incapacity is due to a wound received in the foot whilst on duty as captain and additional aide-de-camp to Brig. Gen'l T. W. Sherman in the assault on Port Hudson in May, 1863."

IRWIN McDOWELL,
Bvt. Maj. Gen'l, Pres'd't Board.
H. STOCKTON,
1st Lieut. Ord., Bvt. Capt., A. D. C., Recorder of Board.

On the 22d May, 1869, this was approved by the Secretary of War, and on the 25th May the President made the following order:

[Special Orders, No. 126—Extract.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 25, 1869.

* * * * * *

12. Brevet Brigadier-General Adam Badeau, 1st lieutenant U. S. Army, having, at his own request, been ordered before a board of examination, and having been found "incapacitated for active service, and that said incapacity is due to a wound received in the foot whilst on duty as captain and additional aide-de-camp to Brigadier-General T. W. Sherman in the assault on Port Hudson in May, 1863," the President directs that his name be placed upon the list of retired officers of that class in which the disability results from long and faithful service, or from some injury incident thereto, in accordance with sections 16 and 17 of the Act approved August 3, 1861. In accordance with section 32 of the Act approved July 28, 1866, General Badeau is, by direction of the President, retired with the full rank of captain, to date from May 18, 1869.

* * * * * * *

By command of General Sherman.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

III. The claimant held the office of assistant secretary of legation, and received the salary thereof, until the 6th December, 1869, when he resigned. By order of the President, December 28, 1869, he was "assigned to duty in the City of Washington" as an officer of the army, it being stated that the order was to date from December 6, 1869. He drew from the pay department of the army the pay of an active captain for the period from December 6, 1869, to February 21, 1870, and the pay of a retired captain from February 21, 1870, to April 30, 1870, the pay so drawn amounting to $621.84. He was appointed consul-general at London, England, April 28, 1870, and was in the consular service of the Government until the commencement of this suit, except for a period of about fourteen months, beginning in September, 1881, and ending in November, 1882.

IV. From May, 1869, until May, 1878, the claimant was borne upon the retired list of the army as having been retired with the rank of captain on the 18th May, 1869. On the 7th May, 1878, the following order was issued:

[General Orders No. 20.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.
Washington, May 7, 1878.

The following are announced:

Dropped.

* * * * *

In conformity with section 1223 Revised Statutes and opinion of Attorney-General dated December 11, 1877. (1) Captain Adam Badeau, U. S. Army, retired, to date from May 19, 1869.

* * * * *

By command of General Sherman.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

The claimant thereupon applied to have the above order revoked, upon the ground that he was disabled within the intent of the Act 3d March, 1875; and he produced and filed the following certificate:

BANGOR, MAINE, Feb. 20, 1878.

I, Eugene F. Sanger, physician and surgeon, certify that I was medical director of the 2d division, 19th Army Corps, before Port Hudson, May 27, 1863, and that Captain Adam Badeau, A. D. C. on Brig.-Gen'l T. W. Sherman's staff, received a bullet wound penetrating the instep of the left foot, and making its exit below the internal malleolus. I resected the 2d cuniform bone, parts of the 1st and 3d cuniform, and the proximal end of the 2d metatarsal bone, on acc't of which resection he was sent to the rear at New Orleans.

Respectfully, Your Ob't Servant,

EUGENE F. SANGER,
Brevet Lt. Col. and late Brigade Surgeon, late Medical Director, 19th Army Corps, now Examining Surgeon Pension Bureau.

The foregoing surgeon's certificate was duly referred to the Surgeon-General of the army. The order of reference and the Surgeon-General's report thereon were as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.
Washington, March 4, 1878.

Respectfully referred to the Surgeon-General, U. S. Army, for his opinion as to whether the disability of Captain Badeau, for which he was retired, can be regarded as bringing him within that class of officers specified in the proviso of section 2, Act of March 3, 1875 (G. O.

16 of 1875), who have "an arm or leg permanently disabled by reason of resection on account of wounds."

The proceedings of the Retiring Board in Captain Badeau's case and other papers are inclosed herewith.

By order of the Secretary of War.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE.
March 6, 1878.

Respectfully returned to the Adjutant-General of the army with opinion that the evidence submitted is sufficient to establish that Captain Badeau's case comes properly within that class of officers specified by section 2, Act of March 3, 1875, as one in which an arm or leg is permanently disabled by reason of resection on account of wounds.

J. W. BARNES,
Surgeon-General.

Whereupon the Secretary of War, on the 3d of July, 1878, made the following order, under which the claimant was borne on the retired list of the army up to the time of his bringing this action:

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 3, 1878.

Respectfully returned to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

The former decision in Capt. Badeau's case was correct, as the record then stood, but it now appearing that his case comes clearly within the provisions of the proviso to section 2, Act of March 3, 1875, his name will be restored to the retired list.

GEORGE W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

V. From the 18th May, 1869, to the 6th December, 1869, the claimant received no pay as a military officer, nor has he received military pay at any time while holding a diplomatic or cousular office.

From the 6th December, 1869, to the 21st February, 1870, while assigned to duty in the City of Washington as a retired officer under the Act 21st January, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. p. 22), the claimant was paid as a captain in active service the sum of $396.92, during which period he was rendering service as an officer.

From the 21st February, 1870, to the 31st October, 1882, the claimant was paid as an officer on the retired list for periods when he was not holding a diplomatic or consular office, the sum of $2,163.18.

There has been withheld from the claimant while not holding a diplomatic or consular office his pay as a retired officer from November 1, 1882, to November 25, 1882, amounting to $——.

There has been withheld from the claimant while holding a diplomatic or consular office between the 19th May, 1869, and the 19th February, 1884, when this action was brought, his pay as a retired officer, amounting to the sum of $——.

VI. The claimant was beyond the seas at the time when the foregoing claims accrued, and his petition was filed in this court within three years after the disability had ceased.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

The court being equally divided upon the foregoing findings as to the claimant's right to recover, does, for the purposes of an appeal, frame the following conclusions of law:

The petition of the claimant and the counterclaim of the defendants should both be dismissed.

Thereupon judgment was entered dismissing the petition of the claimant and the counterclaim of the United States. Appeals were prosecuted by both parties to this court, and the records filed herein August 10, and October 5, 1887.

On the 5th of October, 1888, a stipulation was filed, adding to the record certain conclusions and order of the Court of Claims and certain matters introduced in evidence, at a stage of the case prior to the final findings.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 2 of the Act of March 30, 1868, entitled "An Act Making Appropriations for the Consular and Diplomatic Expenses of the Government for the Year Ending Thirtieth June, 1869, and for Other Purposes" (15 Stat. at L. 56, 58), is as follows: "That any officer of the army or navy of the United States who shall, after the passage of this Act, accept or hold any appointment in the diplomatic or consular service of the government, shall be considered as having resigned his said office, and the place held by him in the military or naval service shall be deemed and taken to be vacant, and shall be filled in the same manner as if the said officer had resigned the same." This was carried into the Revised Statutes (1874) as section 1223.

By section 18, chap. 42, Act of August 8, 1861 (12 Stat. at L. 290), it was provided "that the officers partially retired shall be entitled to wear the uniform of their respective grades, shall continue to be borne upon the army register, or navy register, as the case may be, and shall be subject to the rules and articles of war, and to trial by general court-martial for any breach of the said articles." And this was re-enacted as section 1256 of the Revised Statutes.

By section 16 of the said Act of August 8, 1861, it was provided "that there shall not be on the retired list at any one time more than seven per centum of the whole number of the officers of the army as fixed by law;" while by section 5 of the Act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. 317), "The number of officers who may be retired in accordance with existing laws shall be in the discretion of the President: Provided, That the whole number on the retired list shall at no time exceed three hundred;" and this reappears as section 1258 of the Revised Statutes.

By section 28 of the Act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. 320), "Any retired officer may, on his own application, be detailed to serve as professor in any college," and such is section 1260 of the Revised Statutes.

By the first section of "An Act Relating to Retired Officers of the Army," approved January 21, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. 62), it was provided "that no retired officer of the army shall hereafter be assigned to duty of any kind, or be entitled to receive more than the pay and allowances provided by law for retired officers of his grade; and all such assignments heretofore made shall terminate within thirty days from the passage of this Act;" but by Resolution of April 6, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. 372), the law of January 21st was limited so as not to apply "to officers selected by the Board of Commissioners of the Soldiers' Home, District of Columbia, for duty at that institution, such selection being approved by the Secretary of War," and this is re-enacted in section 1259 of the Revised Statutes.

By section 18 of the Act of July 15, 1870, already referred to (16 Stat. at L. 319), it was enacted "That it should not be lawful for any officer of the army of the United States on the active list to hold any civil office, whether by election or appointment, and any such officer accepting or exercising the functions of a civil office shall at once cease to be an officer of the army, and his commission shall be vacated thereby," and this is carried into the Revised Statutes as section 1222.

Thus in the Acts of 1868 and 1870, and in sections 1222 and 1223 of the Revised Statutes, Congress distinguished, and adhered to the distinction, between officers on both lists and officers on the active list only, and between ordinary civil appointments and appointments in the diplomatic or consular service. No officer, whether on the active or retired list, could accept appointment in the latter, and remain an officer; but that rule was not applied to retired officers in the matter of holding a civil office.

"That all officers of the army who have been heretofore retired by reason of disability arising from wounds received in action shall be considered as retired upon the actual rank held by them, whether in the regular or volunteer service, at the time when such wound was received, and shall be borne on the retired list and receive pay hereafter accordingly; and this section shall be taken and construed to include those now borne on the retired list, placed upon it on account of wounds received in action: Provided, That no part of the foregoing Act shall apply to those officers who had been in service as commissioned officers twenty-five years at the date of their retirement; nor to those retired officers who had lost an arm or leg, or has an arm or leg permanently disabled by reason of resection, on account of wounds, or both eyes by reason of wounds received in battle; and every such officer now borne on the retired list shall be continued thereon, notwithstanding the provisions of section two, chapter thirty-eight, Act of March thirty, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight: And be it also provided, That no retired officer shall be affected by this Act who has been retired or may hereafter be retired on the rank held by him at the time of his retirement; and that all Acts or parts of Acts inconsistent herewith be, and are hereby, repealed." (18 Stat. at L. 512).

By section 32 of the Act of July 28, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 337), it was provided "that officers of the regular army entitled to be retired on account of disability occasioned by wounds received in battle, may be retired upon the full rank of the command held by them, whether in the regular or volunteer service, at the time such wounds were received."

It was within the power of Congress to change the rank here spoken of, and this it did by the Act of 1875, which substitutes for "the full rank of the command held by them" the "actual rank held by them," and which embraces only "those now borne on the retired list, placed upon it on account of wounds received in action." Wood v. United States, 107 U. S. 414, 417 [27: 542, 543]. Under this Act officers of twenty-five years' service at the date of their retirement, and officers who had lost an arm or leg or had an arm or leg permanently disabled, or both eyes, were not subject to be considered as retired upon the actual rank held by them when wounded, as provided in the first part of the section; and no retired officer was affected by the Act who had been or might be retired on the rank actually held by him at the time of such retirement; and all officers mentioned in the first part of the section, or of twenty-five years' service, or who had lost an arm or leg, etc., could accept appointment in the diplomatic or consular service, notwithstanding section 2 of the Act of March 30, 1868, or section 1228 of the Revised Statutes, as we think the words "every such officer now borne on the retired list shall be continued thereon" refer to all officers previously mentioned in the section; and the provision in this respect shows that up to March 3, 1875, section 2 of the Act of 1868 applied to officers on the retired list as well as those in active service.

Sections 1763, 1764, and 1765 of the Revised Statutes are as follows:

"Sec. 1763. No person who holds an office, the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, shall receive compensation for discharging the duties of any other office, unless expressly authorized by law.

"Sec. 1764. No allowance or compensation shall be made to any officer or clerk, by reason of the discharge of duties which belong to any other officer or clerk in the same or any other department; and no allowance or compensation shall be made for any extra services whatever, which any officer or clerk may be required to perform, unless expressly authorized by law.

"Sec. 1765. No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service or duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law, and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance, or compensation."

Whether by the order of the Secretary of War, July 8, 1878, the claimant's name was properly restored to the retired list we are not called upon to determine in this case, because even were that so we do not think his petition can be sustained.

General Badeau received as Consul-General at London an annual salary of seventy-five hundred dollars, and at Havana, of six thousand dollars, as fixed by law, and was expressly inhibited from receiving any additional salary, allowance, pay, or compensation for discharging the duties of any other office unless expressly authorized by law, of which there is no pretense in this case. It has been decided that a person holding two offices or employments under the government, when the services rendered or which might be required under them were not incompatible, is not precluded from receiving the salary or compensation of both. Converse v. United States, 62 U. S. 21 How. 463 [16: 192]; United States v. Brindle, 110 U. S. 688 [28: 286]. But the Treasury Department did not apparently regard this case as falling within that exception, and we agree with that conclusion. United States v. Shoemaker, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 338 [19: 80]; Stansbury v. United States, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 33 [19: 315]; Hoyt v. United States, 51 U. S. 10 How. 109, 141 [13: 348, 361].

Under the Act of 1875 retired officers situated as therein described, are so far taken out of the operation of the Act of 1868 as not to be held, if they accept or hold diplomatic or consular appointment, to have resigned their places in the army; but this does not change the general policy of the law, and does not entitle them to pay as army officers during the period of time when they are absent from their country in the discharge of continuous official duties inconsistent with subjection to the rules and articles of war, and the other incidents of military service. Notwithstanding section 1223, such officers, when in the diplomatic or consular service, may still be borne on the retired list, but cannot receive double compensation.

Nor can we disturb the judgment adverse to the counterclaim. As between individuals, where money has been paid under a mistake of law, it cannot be recovered back; but it is denied that this rule is applicable to the United States, upon the ground that the government is not bound by the mistakes of its officers, whether of law or of fact. United States v. Kirkpatrick, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 720 [6: 199]; United States v. Bank of Metropolis, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 377 [10: 774]; McElrath v. United States, 102 U. S. 426 [26: 189]. But inasmuch as the claimant, if not an officer de jure, acted as an officer de facto, we are not inclined to hold that he has received money which, ex æquo et bono, he ought to return.

He was paid as a military officer from December 6, 1869, to the 21st of February, 1870, and for the time from February 21, 1870, to April 30, 1870, and for about fourteen months beginning in September, 1881, and ending in November, 1882. After May 19, 1869, he was employed in a diplomatic or consular capacity except during the above specified periods; and the implication from the findings is that he was paid for those periods, because he was actually rendering service, whether subject to assignment thereto or not.

The judgment of the Court of Claims is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Miller dissented.

WILLIAM S. HASSALL, Trustee, Appt.,
v.
A. W. WILCOX.

Judgment only binds the parties—proceeding in rem—lien for labor.

1. A judgment in a suit in a state court establishing a lien on a railroad for labor does not bind the trustee under the mortgage or the bondholders of the road who are not made parties to it.

2. It is essential to a proceeding in rem that there should, at least, be constructive notice to adverse claimants, to appear and maintain their rights, before a judgment in such a proceeding can operate as prima facie evidence.

3. Where the circuit court awarded a lien, with a priority, for the full amount claimed, and the evidence sustained the lien for only a part of such amount, and the master's report did not state the amount for which a lien was proper, the case was remanded for further proofs.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 18th of February, 1879, an Act was passed by the State of Texas (General Laws of 1879, chap. 12), entitled "An Act to Protect Mechanics, Laborers and Operatives on Railroads Against the Failure of Owners, Contractors and Subcontractors or Agents to Pay Their Wages When Due, and Provide a Lien for Such Wages," which provided as follows:

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, That all mechanics, laborers, and operatives who may have performed labor in the construction or repair of any railroad, locomotive, car, or other equipment to a railroad, or who may have performed labor in the operating of a railroad, and to whom wages are due or owing, shall hereafter have a lien prior to all others upon such railroad and its equipment for such wages as are unpaid.

"SEC. 2. In all suits for wages due by a railroad company for such labor as heretofore mentioned, upon proof being satisfactorily made that such labor had been performed, either at the instance of said company, a contractor, or subcontractor, or agent of said company, and that such wages are due, and the lien given by this Act is sought to be enforced, it shall be the duty of the court having jurisdiction to try the same to render judgment for the amount of wages found to be due, and to adjudge and order said railroad and equipments, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be sold to satisfy said judgment. In all suits of this kind it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to make other lien-holders defendants thereto, but such lien-holders may intervene and become parties thereto and have their respective rights adjusted and determined by the court.

SEC. 3. Suits by mechanics, laborers, and operatives, for their wages due by railroad companies, may be instituted and prosecuted in any county in this State where such labor was performed, or in which the cause of action or part thereof accrued, or in the county in which the principal office of such railroad company is situated; and in all such suits service of process may be made in the manner now required by law.

SEC. 4. The lien created by this Act shall cease to be operative in twelve months after the creation of the lien, if no step be sooner taken to enforce it."

On the 15th of May, 1882, the Rio Grande and Pecos Railway Company, a Texas corporation, made a mortgage to the Mercantile Trust Company of the State of New York, a New York corporation, covering all the property, real and personal, of the Texas corporation, including its franchises, lands, railways, and other property, to secure $600,000 of coupon bonds issued by it, dated June 1, 1882, payable in thirty years and bearing semi-annual interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

On or prior to the 27th of March, 1884, A. W. Wilcox presented a petition to the District Court of the County of Webb, in the State of Texas, subscribed and sworn to by him before the clerk of that court, in the words following:

"THE STATE OF TEXAS, County of Webb.

"To the Hon. the District Court of Webb County:

"The petition of A. W. Wilcox, who resides in the County of Webb, and State of Texas, complaining of the Rio Grande and Pecos R. R. Co., a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Texas, and operating its lines through the County of Webb, where it has its principal offices, represents that heretofore, to wit, on the 12th day of January, 1884, the said defendant, in consideration of the payment of claims for labor on said defendant's R. R., executed and delivered to your petitioner a certain promissory note (see note) for the sum of fifty-five hundred and twenty-six $\frac{75}{100}$ dollars, with interest, 10 per cent, whereby defendant promised and became liable to pay your petitioner the said note, with interest, according to the tenor thereof. Your petitioner represents that he is the owner and holder of said note, and that defendant has failed and refused to pay the said note, though thereto requested, to petitioner's damage. Wherefore he prays for judgment for his debt and interest, and damages, and foreclosure of his lien on defendant's railroad and equipments."

The promissory note referred to in said petition was as follows:

"LAREDO, TEXAS, January 12th, 1884.

"The Rio Grande and Pecos Railway Company, for value received, hereby promises to pay A. W. Wilcox, or bearer, on demand, the sum of fifty-five hundred and twenty-six $\frac{75}{100}$ dollars for services, and for amounts advanced on claims for labor performed in the construction and maintenance of the Rio Grande and Pecos Railroad, with interest at ten per cent per annum until paid, and upon default in payment A. S. McLane is hereby authorized, in the name of the said Rio Grande and Pecos Railroad Company, to confess judgment in any court of competent jurisdiction, hereby waiving citation and service thereof.

"THE RIO GRANDE AND PECOS RAILWAY COMPANY,
By A. C. HUNT, The President.

"[Corporate Seal of The Rio Grande and Pecos Railway Company.]"

On the 27th of March, 1884, the District Court rendered the following judgment:

"A. W. WILCOX
vs. } 485.
"THE RIO GRANDE & PECOS R'Y CO.

"This day came plaintiff, and the defendant, by attorney-in-fact, A. S. McLane, comes and says that he cannot deny the action of the said A. W. Wilcox, and that he is justly indebted to plaintiff in the sum of fifty-five hundred and twenty-six and $\frac{72}{100}$ dollars, with ten per cent interest thereon from the 12th day of January, 1884, and it appearing to the court that a sufficient power of attorney has been filed in this cause authorizing A. S. McLane, in default of payment, to confess judgment before any court of competent jurisdiction, and waiving citation and service, it is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff, A. W. Wilcox, have and recover of the defendant, The Rio Grande and Pecos Railroad Company, the sum of fifty-five hundred and twenty-six $\frac{72}{100}$ dollars, with ten per cent interest thereon from the 12th day of January, 1884, for which execution may issue. It is further ordered by the court that the plaintiff have a lien on the said Rio Grande and Pecos Railroad Company and its equipments to secure the payment of this judgment, and that said railroad and its equipments, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be sold to satisfy this judgment."

On the 14th of April, 1884, C. B. Wright, a citizen of Pennsylvania and a holder of $121,000 of the bonds, the interest on which, due December 1, 1883, had not been paid, filed a bill in equity in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas, against the railway company and the Mercantile Trust Company, setting forth that the railway company was the owner of valuable coal lands in the County of Webb, and had recently constructed a railroad from Santo Tomas to Laredo; that the business of the railway was that of a railway and transportation company and of a miner of coal; that recently there had been expended a large amount of money in opening the coal beds, and erecting appliances for mining the coal and transporting it to market; that the principal business of the railroad was the transportation of the coal thus mined; that the value of the assets of the company consisted largely in the fact that the coal mines and the railroad were owned by the same corporation; and that any separation of the two properties would be disastrous to the creditors of the company, and would lessen materially the aggregate value of the two properties.

The bill then set forth the making of the bonds and the mortgage, and the interest of the plaintiff in the bonds; that the company had recently incurred a debt of between $30,000 and $40,000, in constructing and equipping the railroad; that, under the laws of Texas, such debt was entitled to a first lien on the road and its franchises and property, in preference to the first-mortgage bondholders, for a period of twelve months after its completion; that long before the expiration of twelve months from such completion, suits were brought upon many, if not upon all, "of the labor and material claims above mentioned," and judgment in some instances had been had thereon, on which executions had been issued which were then pending against the company, and under which, unless some relief was afforded by the court in which the bill was filed, a large portion of the property of the company would be diverted by sales by the sheriff, and the property be thus separated and its aggregate value impaired; that, in addition to such indebtedness, there was outstanding a large unsecured indebtedness, on which suit would shortly be brought, unless the property were put into the hands of a receiver; that the company was insolvent and unable to meet the interest on its fixed charges or its ordinary debts and obligations; and that there was urgent necessity for the interference of the court, to protect the property from suits and executions, and to preserve it as a whole, so that its business might continue to be carried on, and its income and assets be applied to the payment of its debts in due order, for the general advantage of all its creditors, and more especially to enable provision to be made by the first-mortgage bondholders for the payment of the obligations held by laborers, materialmen, and others, who, under the laws of Texas, were entitled to a lien upon the property, prior to that of the first-mortgage bondholders.

The prayer of the bill was, that the rights of the creditors of the company might be ascertained and declared; that, as it was doubtful whether the Mercantile Trust Company could, under the laws of Texas, take possession of the mortgaged property, the court would appoint a receiver to take possession of it, with such power and authority in regard to the preservation and use of it as should seem best adapted to protect the interests of all the persons concerned; and for general relief. The bill was not sworn to.

On the same 14th of April, 1884, the railroad company filed an answer, signed by its president, and which had been sworn to by him on the 9th of April, 1884, which stated that there were outstanding a large number of claims for work and labor done in and about the construction of the railroad of the company, and judgments had been obtained on some of the claims, on which executions had been issued, and, although sales under them had been put off from time to time, portions of the property would be exposed to sale under the executions, unless prevented by the decree of the court; and that the property of the company would be irreparably injured by any separation of its coal and railway properties, the two being both necessary for the transaction of its business of mining coal and transporting it to market. The company submitted itself to the decree of the court.

On the same 14th of April, 1884, an order, signed by the circuit judge, entitled in the cause, was filed, which stated that on the 9th of April, 1884, the case was heard on a motion for the appointment of a receiver, on bill and affidavits, the plaintiff and the company appearing. By the order, one Smith was appointed receiver of the company and of its franchises and all its property. The order authorized the receiver to run and operate the railway, to preserve the property, to continue the mining operations and sell the coal already mined or to be mined, and out of the proceeds to pay wages, current expenses, and interest. It also directed the receiver to ascertain and report the condition of the property and of the debts charged thereon or owing by the company, and directed that, upon presenting such report, he be authorized to borrow money to pay the running expenses of the company, and to settle and pay off liens prior to the first-mortgage bonds, and all other expenses incurred by him, including his own compensation as receiver, and to issue receiver's certificates for the same, in such form and amounts as should be from time to time authorized by the court.

On the 11th of June, 1884, the court made an order directing the receiver to prepare certificates in a form given in the order, to an amount not exceeding $25,000, which certificates, together with such further like certificates as might be thereafter authorized by the court, the order stated should be a first and exclusive lien upon all the property of the company, prior to any other liens thereupon, each certificate to be for $1,000, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, and payable out of any surplus money in the hands of the receiver after paying the running expenses of the company; that he might dispose of the certificates at not more than one per cent discount, and that, after exhausting the receipts of the railroad, he should pay out of the proceeds of the certificates: (1) the running expenses of the company which had accrued since his appointment as receiver, including the expenses of the first-mortgage bondholders in obtaining his appointment; and (2) out of the balance remaining, pay so much of the debts of the company as might be reported by the master and approved by the judge, taking an assignment of the claims to himself as receiver.

That order also appointed a master to report upon all claims which should be presented to him after the publication by him of a notice calling on all persons having or asserting any claims, by judgment or otherwise, prior to the first-mortgage bonds, or entitled to a preference in payment out of the proceeds of the road, to present and file the same with him.

On the 24th of June, 1884, under that order, the said A. W. Wilcox filed with the master the following claim: "A judgment of the District Court of Webb County, Texas, rendered March 27th, 1884, in cause No. 435, in favor of the said A. W. Wilcox against the said Rio Grande and Pecos Railway Company, for $5,526.78, with ten per cent interest thereon from January 12th, 1884, and declaring and establishing a lien on said Rio Grande and Pecos Railway and its equipments, to secure the payment of said judgment, and directing the said railway and its equipments, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be sold to satisfy the said judgment, as will more fully appear by a duly certified copy of said judgment hereto annexed, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part hereof. The lien declared in said judgment is based upon money due by the said Rio Grande and Pecos Railway Company to mechanics, laborers, and operatives who performed labor in the constructing and repairing and operating said railway, and thereby under the laws of Texas acquired a lien prior to all others, and that said claims so constituting a prior lien were bought by the said A. W. Wilcox, and the said Rio Grande and Pecos Railway Company acknowledged the existence thereof, and promised to pay the same by its obligation and note of date January 12th, 1884, upon which obligation and note the said judgment was rendered. The said judgment is unreversed and remains in full force. And the said A. W. Wilcox claims that his said lien, established by said judgment before the institution of this suit or the appointment of a receiver, is prior to the first-mortgage bonds, and is entitled to preference of payment out of the earnings and proceeds of said railway, and will apply to this court for such appropriate orders as will secure prompt payment." The claim was sworn to by Wilcox on the 23d of June, 1884.

The master filed his report upon the claims, and among them the claim of Wilcox, on the 27th of September, 1884. By that report it appears that Wright, the plaintiff in this suit, filed objections before the master to the allowance of the claim of Wilcox, on these grounds: (1) that the judgment in favor of Wilcox in the District Court of the County of Webb was obtained by fraud and collusion between Wilcox and the president of the company; (2) that the note was without consideration and fraudulent; (3) that, for the purpose of defeating the lien of the mortgage, Wilcox falsely represented to the district court that the note was for services and for amounts advanced on claims for labor performed in the construction and maintenance of the railroad, and that it was entitled to a lien prior to all others to secure its payment; that he was not entitled to any lien; that he performed no services and owned no claims which entitled him to such lien; that any lien was barred by the limitation of one year; that the act of the president of the company in making the note and in authorizing the confession of the judgment was ultra vires; and that the company was not indebted to Wilcox by reason of the note, and it was without consideration. The paper containing the objections also stated that Wright had, on the 19th of July, 1884, filed his suit against Wilcox, in the District Court of the County of Webb, to set aside and annul the said judgment on account of the acts of collusion and fraud in procuring the same, and that such suit was still pending.

It also appears by the report of the master, that Wilcox introduced before the master, as evidence in support of his claim, a copy of his petition to the District Court of the County of Webb, a copy of the promissory note, and a copy of the judgment of March 27, 1884, and that other evidence was put in by the respective parties, Wilcox and Wright.

The master reported that the note included amounts which were not secured by a lien under the State Act of 1879, as well as amounts which were. The conclusion of the master was that Wilcox had a valid claim against the company for $5,526.78, with 10 per cent interest from January 12, 1884; but that he had no lien prior to that of the first-mortgage bondholders. On the 6th of October, 1884, Wilcox filed exceptions to the report.

On the 7th of October, 1884, the Mercantile Trust Company was duly removed from its office as trustee under the mortgage, and William S. Hassall, of Philadelphia, was appointed trustee in its place. By an order of the court, the bill was dismissed as to the Mercantile Trust Company, and Hassall as trustee was joined as plaintiff with Wright; and a decree was entered by consent, on the 20th of October, 1884, providing for a sale of the property at auction by the trustee, which was modified by a further decree made December 10, 1884, directing the sale of the property free from all liens, for a sum not less than $100,000, which sum, it was stated, would cover the amount of the receiver's certificates and of the claims reported by the master. The sale was made, and the property was purchased by Wright for the sum of $100,000. On the 19th of May, 1885, a decree was made confirming the sale and allowing certain claims as liens prior to the lien of the mortgage, and among them the claim of A. W. Wilcox, for the sum of $5,526.78, with interest at 8 per cent per annum from the day of the contracting of the lien, such amount to be paid after the payment of the receiver's certificates and before any payment to the bondholders. On the 18th of June, 1885, Hassall, as trustee, appealed to this court from such decree, but the appeal was dismissed as to all the claimants but Wilcox. Hassall v. Wilcox, 115 U. S. 598 [29: 504].

Although the statute of Texas under which the superior lien of Wilcox is claimed was passed in 1879, prior to the making of the mortgage in 1882, and although Wilcox brought his suit and obtained his judgment in the state court prior to the filing of the present bill, we do not think it can be held that the trustee under the mortgage or the bondholders were bound by that judgment rendered in a suit to which they were not made parties. Although they had a right to intervene in that suit, they were not obliged to do so, nor was Wright obliged to prosecute the suit which he brought in the state court. They had a right to come into the Circuit Court of the United States to contest the priority of Wilcox's lien, and, as his claim originated after the mortgage was made, compel him to prove affirmatively in that court the existence and priority of his lien, under the statute of Texas. He undertook to do so, but the master reported that he found, from the evidence, that the note on which the judgment was predicated included amounts not secured by a lien under the Act of 1879, as well as amounts for which a lien was given under that Act; and that Wilcox had no lien prior to the first-mortgage bondholders. On exceptions by Wilcox, the circuit court sustained his exceptions, and awarded him a lien with the priority he claimed, for the full amount of $5,526.78, with interest. We do not think the evidence before the master sustained the lien for the whole of that amount

One of the exceptions taken by Wilcox to the master's report was, that the master had, by his finding, nullified the legal force and effect of the judgment of the state court. The circuit court may have proceeded on that ground, in its decree. But we do not think that the proceeding in the state court can be sustained as one in rem. It is essential to such a proceeding that there should at least be constructive notice, by some form of publication or advertisement, to adverse claimants, to appear and maintain their rights, before a judgment in such a proceeding can operate even as prima facie evidence. Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 274, 278, 279 [23: 914, 916]. In the present case, no notice, either personal or constructive, was provided for by the Texas statute, or was given to the other lien holders.

The claim of Wilcox was presented before the master and the circuit court as a claim founded wholly on his judgment and on the statute of Texas and not as a claim arising on the principle adjudged in Union Trust Co. v. Morrison, 125 U. S. 591 [31: 825], or that acted on in the case of Foedick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235 [25: 339], and the cases which followed it; and no facts are shown to sustain it as a claim founded on anything but the statute of Texas.

The appellant claims that the evidence before the master shows that only $382.21 of Wilcox's claim consists of items for which the statute of Texas gives a lien. But, as the master, though saying that the note included amounts for which a lien was given under the Act, did not attempt to state what was the total of such amounts, it is proper that the decree should be reversed, and the case be remanded to the Circuit Court, with a direction to allow a re-examination of the claim of Wilcox, before a master, on the same and further proofs, if desired; and it is so ordered.

Defect of parties—equity jurisdiction—remedy at law—fraud—liability of agent—agent's duty to principal—limitation of action—fraud—notice—setting aside decree—effect of a receipt.

1. A partner who has sold his interest to another partner is not a necessary party to an action for an accounting of the affairs of the partnership.

2. Where a court of equity may grant the relief sought and has jurisdiction of the subject matter, the objection that there is a plain remedy at law should be taken at the earliest opportunity and before the defendants enter upon a full defense.

3. The jurisdiction in equity attaches unless the legal remedy, both in respect to the final relief and the mode of obtaining it is as efficient as the remedy in equity.

4. The remedy in equity, in cases of account, is generally more complete and adequate than it is at law; and in a case where fraud is charged involving the consideration of fiduciary and trust relations, equity jurisdiction will be sustained.

5. Where a principal directs his agent to purchase property for him and instructs the agent that he is willing to give a certain price, and the agent purchases it for a less price, he cannot charge the principal with the larger price which the latter had instructed the agent he was willing to pay. An agent is not obliged to account for commissions which he received from third persons on property the title of which he held as their trustee, and which was conveyed to his principal.

6. Where there was no agreement that the principal should have the benefit of the agent's outstanding contracts, and the agent, before the agency commenced, had contracted to buy a piece of property, the principal cannot recover of the agent the difference between the price at which the agent had bargained for the property and the larger price at which it was subsequently sold to the principal where the latter suffered no pecuniary loss for the want of knowledge of such previous bargain, but got the property at his own offer.

7. Where a party, injured by fraud, is in ignorance of its existence, the duty to commence proceedings arises only upon discovery; and mere submission to an injury, after the act inflicting it is completed, cannot generally, and in the absence of other circumstances, take away a right of action, unless such acquiescence continues for the period limited by the statute for the enforcement of such right.

8. A principal, reposing confidence in an agent and therefore neglecting some source of knowledge which he might have sought, is not chargeable with what he might have found out upon inquiry aroused by suspicion.

9. The setting aside of the decree first rendered and the rendition of another different decree by the court below, is not ground for reversal, where the court had power to take the course it did and this court is satisfied with the result.

10. A receipt, given by the principal to the agent, for a stated amount, as being the amount of the principal's money in the agent's hands, held, under the circumstances of this case not to be conclusive.

APPEALS from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in favor of complainants, for moneys illegally detained and overcharges by defendants. Decree modified.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

In 1872, Thomas Sunderland, Curtis J. Hillyer and William M. Stewart associated themselves for the purchase and sale of real estate in the City of Washington by way of investment and speculation. Hallett Kilbourn, James M. Latta and John F. Olmstead were carrying on business at that time in Washington as real estate agents, in partnership, under the firm name of Kilbourn & Latta, and they were employed, as their agents, by Sunderland, Hillyer and Stewart.

Within a period of a few weeks Sunderland, Hillyer and Stewart had purchased property through Kilbourn & Latta at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars. Sunderland's interest in the purchases was one half, Hillyer's one quarter, and Stewart's one quarter; and soon afterwards and in the same year, Stewart sold out his interest to Sunderland. In addition to these joint purchases, Sunderland purchased for himself in the same way to a large amount.

Two suits in equity in reference to the dealings between the parties had been commenced in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana against Latta alone, and as a partner of Kilbourn & Latta, one on behalf of Sunderland and Hillyer and the other on behalf of Sunderland alone, in which process was served on Latta but not on Kilbourn or Olmstead. Subsequently the original bill in this cause was filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and a stipulation was entered into whereby the subject matter of the causes in Indiana was transferred to the litigation here, and, by amendments made in pursuance of the stipulation, all the controversies were consolidated into this suit, the bill as amended seeking relief in favor of Hillyer and Sunderland as against Kilbourn, Latta and Olmstead, and as against Latta alone, and in favor of Sunderland as against the three and also as against Latta individually. And the answers of Kilbourn and Olmstead, and the several answer of Latta put in issue all the causes of action respectively. The original bill was filed June 9, 1881, and the amendments March 22, 1882. During the proceedings Stewart, who had not been made a party in terms, entered his appearance and filed a disclaimer. The original bill and amendments alleged an arrangement between Sunderland, Hillyer and Stewart for the purchase of real estate, and charged that Kilbourn & Latta were employed as the agents of complainants and Stewart to make for them the proposed purchases under an agreement set out by the complainants as follows:

"That the plaintiffs and the said Stewart should intrust unto said firm as their agents aforesaid the negotiation for and the purchase of such real estate in the said quarter of the said city as the plaintiffs and the said Stewart might elect to acquire; that they should furnish unto the said firm, when by the same thereunto required, such sums of money as might be requisite for the acquisition of the property, and that the plaintiffs and the said Stewart should pay unto the said firm, upon the purchases to be made by said firm on their account, a reasonable compensation, by way of commission, when and in case the said firm should make no charge by way of commission against the vendors of the property; but in case any such charge should be made by the said firm against the vendors, that then the plaintiffs and the said Stewart should pay unto the said firm no commission whatever; that the said firm, in consideration of so being intrusted with the purchase of such real estate and of the commissions which it might derive upon such purchases, should ascertain and point out unto the plaintiffs and the said Stewart such lots and parcels of land, in the said section of the said city, as in the judgment of the said firm might be most advantageously acquired by the plaintiffs and the said Stewart; that the said firm should advise and counsel, to the best of its judgment, knowledge, and experience, the plaintiffs and the said Stewart in respect of the purchase of any particular parcel of land within the said section which they, on their own motion, might suggest to the said firm as desirable to be purchased on their account, and that in any and all cases the said firm should negotiate for the purchase of any real property to be acquired on account of the plaintiffs and the said Stewart at the lowest possible rate at which it could be obtained from the owner, and after ascertaining the price at which any such property might be obtained from the owner, should fairly and to the best of the knowledge and ability of the said firm inform the plaintiffs and the said Stewart whether the said price was such as to render their acquisition of the property desirable, and recommend to them whether they should purchase the property or not; that if the plaintiffs and the said Stewart consented to such purchase, the same should be made on their account by the said firm, and that upon receiving at its request from the purchasers the cash required in the first instance, and also the amount of deferred payments as the same might become payable, the said firm should make due settlement with the vendor or other person entitled to payment."

It is averred that large quantities of real estate were purchased, and that as to each purchase, Kilbourn & Latta represented that they had negotiated with the owner and obtained the lots at the lowest price, and that the price agreed on was the lowest price at which the property could be obtained, and that complainants relied on those representations; that complainants called the attention of Kilbourn & Latta to square No. 115, and requested Kilbourn & Latta to ascertain the owner and price thereof; that thereafter Kilbourn & Latta informed complainants that $65,000 was the lowest price at which the property could be obtained, and advised the purchase, which complainants authorized, paying $20,000 down, which was represented by Kilbourn & Latta to be required by the seller, and the property was conveyed to Latta as trustee for complainants; that these representations were false, and the real price, instead of being $65,000, was only $40,000, and the cash payment required only $8,000, instead of $20,000; that such representations were made for the purpose of cheating complainants and obtaining from them the sum of $25,000, which defendants appropriated to their own use; that the real facts in relation to these purchases were not discovered by them until March, 1881; that complainants, about the same time and in substantially the same manner, were defrauded in reference to the purchase of lot 17 in square 158, the purchase price being put at $8,316, when it was really only $5,000, the firm of Kilbourn & Latta thereby receiving and appropriating $3,316; that Kilbourn & Latta defrauded complainants out of the following sums through the acquisition of the following pieces of property: Square 155, the sum of $5,319.55; three lots in square 158, the sum of $2,663.70; in square 156, the sum of $22,973; that the real truth as to the last transaction did not come to their knowledge until January or February, 1882; that afterwards the property purchased and two other valuable tracts were left in the care of the firm for resale, and in consideration of the probable commissions on such sales the firm agreed that it would keep upon its books the property, look after the payment of taxes, interest, and the like, and disburse the funds therefor without any charge; that prior to January 1, 1873, complainants had sent to the firm some $250,000, and on December 31, 1876, Kilbourn & Latta held a balance in cash due to complainants of not less than $20,000, of which they appropriated $16,520 to their own use for the care and management of the property from June, 1872; that the complainants were ignorant of said charges until June, 1878; that being informed in 1877 by defendants that remittances should be sent to Latta for disbursements, considerable sums were sent to him, of which he wrongfully appropriated the sum of $5,827.50; that Sunderland individually purchased several parcels of real estate through Kilbourn & Latta under the same agreement, which was left in the hands of the said firm, and out of funds of his in their hands the firm wrongfully appropriated $5,978, and also $1,000, of which he was not informed until July, 1878; and that defendant Latta wrongfully appropriated $1,672 belonging to Sunderland of which the latter was ignorant until then.

The defendants in answering denied specifically any such agreement as that alleged by the complainants; averred that such a contract would have been void, if made; insisted that the claims were stale and complainants guilty of laches; and set up the Statute of Frauds and the Statute of Limitations and a receipt in full upon an accounting. They objected that Stewart was a necessary and indispensable party, averred that their charges for care and management were just, reasonable and proper, and denied all allegations of fraud.

The cause was ordered to be heard by the general term in the first instance, and that court rendered a decree January 9, 1885, in favor of the complainants and against all the defendants for various sums, namely, the sum of $5,319.55 for profit unjustly and illegally detained by the defendants from the complainants, arising out of the purchase of square No. 155, and also for the sum of $3,316 in respect to profit made by defendants in the purchase of lot 17 in square No. 158; also for $8,263.33 for overcharge made by defendants for care and management of complainant's property; and in favor of complainant Thomas Sunderland, individually, in pursuance of the stipulation of the parties filed in the cause against all of the defendants, for the sum of $5,973.33 for overcharges for care and management of property belonging to Sunderland; and also, in pursuance of said stipulation, in favor of Sunderland individually against Latta individually, for $1,672.85, being for overcharges for care and management; and also, in pursuance of said stipulation, in favor of complainants against Latta individually, for $2,838.92 for overcharge made by Latta for care and management of their property, and for $1,235.79, money retained by Latta from complainants' moneys in his hands.

For the opinion of the court, which was pronounced July 5, 1884, see Sunderland v. Kilbourn, 3 Mackey, 506.

Subsequently, upon petition for rehearing, the first decree was vacated and a second rendered January 22, 1885, awarding to complainants against defendants the sum of $3,316; and also the sum of $8,000 for excessive charges for care and management; and also in favor of complainants and against Latta individually of $2,500. From this decree an appeal was taken by the defendants jointly and by Latta individually, which is No. 188, and appeals by the complainants jointly and by Sunderland individually, which are Nos. 261 and 262.

Mr. M. F. Morris, for Sunderland's Exrx.:

A petition for rehearing can have no valid or legal effect unless the parties to be affected by it have notice of its pendency; and this notice cannot be implied. It is a jurisdictional fact, and therefore must appear affirmatively from the record.

A double agency of a real estate agent or broker and of the purchaser involves inconsistent duties and the contract is void.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

It is argued on behalf of Kilbourn, Latta, and Olmstead that Stewart was an indispensable party to the cause, and that the bill should have been dismissed because he was not made such. Title to the real estate purchased by Sunderland, Hillyer, and Stewart was placed in Latta in trust as matter of convenience, and it appears that in December, 1872, Stewart sold all his interest to Sunderland, evidencing the transaction by a memorandum in writing, in form of a bill of sale, which is not produced, but the fact is admitted by stipulation, and that he subsequently executed a more formal assignment, which is given in the record. Stewart testifies that Sunderland "was, with the knowledge and consent of the firm of Kilbourn & Latta, substituted in my place, and from that day I ceased to have any interest whatever in the transactions or business." On the 1st of November, 1883, the appearance of Stewart was entered by counsel, with a disclaimer "of all right and cause of action on his part against the defendants, or any of them, on account of any of the matters set forth or involved in this cause." Under these circumstances we regard this objection as untenable.

The point is also pressed that the remedy at law was plain, adequate and complete, and jurisdiction in equity therefore wanting. We do not understand counsel to repudiate the stipulation, or to suggest multifariousness or any objection arising upon the rather unusual mode pursued to secure a conclusion in four cases rolled into one, but to contend that the determination of all the matters in issue belongs on the law side of the court. The defendants fully answered the bill, and raised no such objection, and, the cause being at issue, and evidence taken, it was ordered on the 23d of February, 1883, by consent, to be heard by the general term in the first instance. On the 24th of March, 1884, the defendant moved to dismiss on the ground of the adequacy of the remedy at law.

We have had occasion recently to remark that where it is competent for the court to grant the relief sought, and it has jurisdiction of the subject matter, this objection should be taken at the earliest opportunity and before the defendants enter upon a full defense. Reynes v. Dumont, 130 U. S. 354 [ante, 934]. By stipulation several suits had in effect been consolidated with the intention, by consent, of adjusting the conflicting claims between Sunderland and Hillyer jointly and Sunderland alone, and Kilbourn, Latta and Olmstead, and Latta alone, and the parties had proceeded in their pleadings upon that theory, and taken all the evidence, and had the cause set down for hearing. It is then suggested that Sunderland and Hillyer and Sunderland cannot maintain their suit in equity, but must be remitted to actions at law. We do not agree with this view.

The jurisdiction in equity attaches unless the legal remedy, both in respect to the final relief and the mode of obtaining it, is as efficient as the remedy which equity would confer under the same circumstances. The parties stood in a fiduciary relation towards each other, and, in the course of the transactions between them, from thirty to forty different lots of ground were bought for the complainants in upwards of fifteen distinct purchases. As to five of these purchases fraud is specifically charged. A considerable amount of complainants' money was in defendants' hands, and a counterclaim was set up by them in relation to services performed in and about the care of a portion of the property purchased; services covering many payments for taxes, interest, etc.; making of loans and procuring renewals; receipts and advances. The transactions were all parts of one general enterprise, and the claims of a character involving trust relations. Before the severance of the connection between the parties, Kilbourn & Latta dissolved, and the amounts due from Kilbourn & Latta, if any, and from Latta alone, if any, to Sunderland and Hillyer or to Sunderland, and the offsets and counterclaims of Kilbourn & Latta, or of Latta, all sprang from one series of operations, and required an accounting on both sides; and that accounting, until disentangled by the investigation of the court, was apparently complicated and difficult. "There cannot be any real doubt that the remedy in equity, in cases of account, is generally more complete and adequate than it is or can be at law" (1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 450); and, as the remedy at law in the case in hand was rendered embarrassed and doubtful by the conduct of the defendants, and fraud has in equity a more extensive signification than at law, and, as charged here, involved the consideration of the principles applicable to fiduciary and trust relations between the parties throughout the period of their connection, we concur with the supreme court of the District in sustaining the jurisdiction.

Complainants proceeded upon the liability of the defendants to account for the unauthorized appropriation of moneys received as complainants' agents, the amount of which they sought to reduce by excessive charges for the care and management of complainants' property; and also for certain differences between what was paid by complainants for property purchased through defendants at one price, though obtained by defendants at another. The different amounts claimed are sufficiently set forth in the statement of the case.

By the decree the court awarded in favor of the complainants and against all the defendants, the sum of $3,316 as received from complainants in the purchase of lot 17, square 158, under circumstances requiring its return, and the sum of $8,000 for excessive charges; and in favor of the complainants and against the defendant Latta for the sum of $2,500 for overcharges; and disallowed all the other items. The correctness of these allowances and disallowances is questioned upon these appeals respectively.

We affirm the conclusions reached by the supreme court of the District in disposing of the various amounts alleged to have been so received as to justify a decree against the defendants in respect to them.

As to lot No. 17 in square No. 158, the direction of the complainants to the defendants was, "We are willing to give 50 cents a foot for any property you can get in that square." This was the maximum price, and lot 17 at that rate would have amounted to $8,316. The defendants succeeded in purchasing it for $5,000, and then charged it to the complainants at the maximum. Clearly, the money so received must be accounted for to the complainants from whom it was obtained by a violation of fiduciary relations.

The claim for profits on square 156, of $14,601, rests on different ground. That property had been purchased by a real estate association in October, 1871, for speculative purposes, and conveyed to Kilbourn by Thomas Young, the vendor, as trustee for the association. Evidence is given by which it is attempted to show that Kilbourn & Latta had been guilty of dereliction of duty as between themselves and the real estate association; and it is argued that they did not account to their associates in that concern for their half of the profits. But with all this these complainants have nothing to do. The profits which Kilbourn & Latta were entitled to as between themselves and the real estate association, and the commissions which they received from the latter can hardly be held as to be accounted for to those complainants, in the absence of an agreement that the benefit of all contracts defendants had with others should be shared with them.

As to square No. 115, Kilbourn & Latta, before their connection with complainants, had made an offer for the square, which was accepted; and, while the title was being put in marketable shape, in order that the sale might be consummated, their agency for complainants was entered upon. Kilbourn & Latta's bargain for the lot was $40,000, but there was no agreement, as we have said before, that the complainants should have the benefit of all defendant's outstanding contracts; and, as they were contented with their purchase, it is difficult to see upon what ground they can recover here. The relations between the parties were such that Kilbourn & Latta should have disclosed that they were acting as principals in this sale, but the complainants suffered no pecuniary loss for want of such disclosure, since they took the property at their own price. Their remedy, if they were deceived, lay in throwing up the bargain; but they did not do so, and could not treat it, as is well said (3 Mackey, 525), "as a contract fulfilled and as a contract broken." The same remarks apply to square 155, and to lot 10 in square No. 158, the bargains having been made before the sales to complainants; and as to lot 8, and half of lot 9 in square No. 158, the defendants deny the receipt even of commissions.

It may be that the money of complainants enabled the defendants to obtain considerable profits in several ventures; but the case made affords no substantial ground for the interposition of the court on that account.

In relation to the alleged overcharges for care and management, the services rendered are set forth in the opinion of the supreme court of the District with much particularity, and the grounds for liberality in the premises strongly urged. We do not care to repeat what has been so well stated there. The firm of Kilbourn & Latta was dissolved December 31, 1876, in possession at the time of a large amount of complainants' money, as against which charges were entered on the firm's books December 12, 1876, for "care and management" from May, 1872, of the property of Sunderland and Hillyer, of $16,526.67, and of the property of Sunderland, of $5,978.33. Similar charges were made by Latta after the dissolution, against Sunderland and Hillyer, to the amount of $5,677.85, and against Sunderland, of $1,672.85. The court found the complainants entitled to recover the sum of $8,000 against all the defendants, and the sum of $2,500 against Latta individually. We think the sum of $1,235.77 should also be allowed against Latta. His account with Sunderland and Hillyer showed a balance due them, June 20, 1878, of $5,480.93, and his account with Sunderland showed an indebtedness from the latter, August 7, 1878, of $4,245.16; and, as counsel for complainants concede the propriety of applying this sum on the amount due Sunderland and Hillyer, a balance of $1,235.77 is left, for which Latta should account with interest from August 7, 1878. The court ruled adversely to the claim of Sunderland against Latta, for overcharges, of $1,672.85, in respect to services rendered, and to the claim of Sunderland against all the defendants for $1,000 commission on sale of Stewart's house. We accept these results, but we are of opinion that Sunderland should be awarded, against all the defendants, a portion of the $5,978.33 charged for services rendered him, and, applying the rule adopted by the District Supreme Court, we decided that he should be decreed the sum of $2,986.66 in respect of this item, with interest from December 12, 1876.

In answer to the defenses of laches and limitation the complainants contend that the alleged bad faith of defendants was not discovered by them until a short time before the bill was filed, and that they had no intelligible information of the excess in charges for care and management until late in June, 1878.

Reasonable diligence is of course essential to invoking the activity of the court, but what constitutes such diligence depends upon the facts of the particular case. Where a party injured by fraud is in ignorance of its existence, the duty to commence proceedings arises only upon discovery; and mere submission to an injury after the act inflicting it is completed cannot generally, and in the absence of other circumstances, take away a right of action, unless such acquiescence continues for the period limited by the statute for the enforcement of such right. DeBussche v. Alt, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 286, 314. We hold that the complainants moved with sufficient promptness upon discovering the fraud, and that although, reposing confidence in their agents, they may have neglected availing themselves of some source of knowledge they might have sought, the defendants cannot be allowed to say that complainants ought to have suspected them, and are chargeable with what they might have found out upon inquiry aroused by such suspicion.

And we are satisfied from the evidence that this suit was commenced as against each and all the defendants within the statutory period after information of the charges for care and management reached the complainants, and that the accounts were so rendered that the rule of acquiescence ordinarily obtaining as between merchants is not applicable here.

On the 10th of September, 1878, Sunderland gave Latta a receipt for $2,715.58 as "Received of Kilbourn & Olmstead, on account of the late firm of Kilbourn & Latta," signed "Sunderland and Hillyer" and "Thomas Sunderland," that $2,715.58 being the amount of complainants' money in their hands, for which defendants admitted their liability; and this is resorted to as conclusive evidence, or at least as of persuasive force, upon the question of the alleged overcharges. In view of the form of the receipt and the testimony as to the facts attending its being signed, we do not attribute that weight to it insisted upon by counsel.

We need not discuss the evidence bearing upon the alleged contract between the parties. Necessarily, the agent for the buyer cannot be the agent for the seller at the same time. But we think that, under the pleadings, the stipulations, and the evidence, a decree was properly passed below and should not be disturbed here for any reason arising upon the record in its bearing on the original terms of the arrangement, nor have we been convinced by the earnest argument of counsel for complainants that the setting aside of the decree first rendered, and the rendition of another decree in some respects different, entitles him to a reversal, as the court had power to take the course it did; and upon a consideration of the whole case we are sufficiently satisfied with the result, except in the particulars indicated.

The decree is affirmed, except so far as it fails to allow the sum of $1,235.77, in favor of Sunderland and Hillyer against Latta individually, and also the sum of $2,986.66, in favor of Sunderland against Kilbourn, Latta and Olmstead; and, as to the nonallowance of those sums, it is reversed, with directions to modify said decree by adding them, with interest, in conformity with this opinion; the costs of this Court to be paid by Kilbourn, Latta and Olmstead; and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Field, dissenting.

J. B. HURLBUT, Appt.,
v.
John J. SCHILLINGER ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 456-472.)

Construction of letters patent for concrete pavements—effect of disclaimer—infringment—equivalent.

1. The proper construction of reissued letters patent No. 4364 granted to John J. Schillinger, May 2, 1871, for an improvement in concrete pavements is, that the invention consists in dividing the pavement into blocks so that one block can be removed and repaired without injury to the rest of the pavement.

2. The effect of the disclaimer was, to leave the patent to be one for a pavement wherein the blocks are formed by interposing some separating material between them. To limit the patent to the permanent interposition of a material, equivalent to tar paper, would limit the actual invention.

3. The first claim of the reissue, as it stood after the disclaimer, held to be infringed, because defendant's pavement is a concrete pavement laid in detached blocks or sections, substantially in the manner described in the specification of the reissue, the detached blocks in the upper course being the equivalent of the detached blocks or sections of the Schillinger pavement.

4. The second claim of the reissue held to be infringed, because the temporary use of the trowel or cutting instrument to divide the upper course into blocks is the equivalent of the tar paper of the Schillinger patent.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity, brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, by John J. Schillinger and Elmer J. Salisbury against J. B. Hurlbut, founded on the alleged infringement of reissued letters patent No. 4364, granted to John J. Schillinger, May 2, 1871, for an "improvement in concrete pavements," on the surrender of original letters patent No. 105,599, granted to said Schillinger, July 19, 1870. The defenses set up in the answer are the invalidity of the reissue, want of utility in the invention, want of novelty, and noninfringement.

The bill was filed in October, 1882. Salisbury having died, the suit was, so far as his interest was concerned, revived in March, 1884, in the name of Olive G. Salisbury, as administratrix. The interest of Salisbury was that he was the exclusive licensee under the reissued patent for the State of Illinois. Issue having been joined, proofs were taken on both sides, and on the 15th of May, 1884, the court entered an interlocutory decree, adjudging that the reissued patent was valid, that the defendant had infringed it, and that the administratrix of Salisbury recover profits and damages from the 26th of August, 1882, the date of the license to Salisbury. The decree also ordered a reference to a master to take an account of the profits and the damages.

The master took proofs, and on the 30th of September, 1884, filed his report, to the effect that between August 26, 1882, and May 20, 1884, the defendant had laid 70,909 feet of pavement by the use of the plaintiff's patent, for which he should be held to account; and that the plaintiffs had shown an established license fee of five cents a square foot, or $3,545.45, as damages, which amount he reported. He also reported that the defendant's profits had amounted to four cents a square foot. The defendant excepted to this report, and, on a hearing, the court held that the evidence did not establish a fixed license fee as a royalty, and that the proper amount of recovery was the defendant's profits, at the rate of four cents a square foot, or $2,836.36; and it entered a final decree, on the 16th of November, 1885, for that amount. The defendant has appealed from that decree.

The specifications, claims and drawings of the original and the reissued patents are as follows, the specifications and claims being placed in parallel columns, the parts of each which are not found in the other being in italic, and the drawings of the original and the reissue being the same:

On the 1st of March, 1875, Schillinger filed in the Patent Office the following disclaimer: "To the Commissioner of Patents: Your petitioner, John J. Schillinger, of the City and County and State of New York, represents that letters patent of the United States, reissue No. 4,864, bearing date May 2, 1871, were granted to him for an improvement in concrete pavements. That he has reason to believe that, through inadvertence, accident or mistake, the specification and claim of said letters patent are too broad, including that of which your petitioner was not the first inventor, and he therefore hereby enters his disclaimer to the following words: 'And since the concrete in setting shrinks, the second block when set does not adhere to the first, and so on,' and which occurs near the middle part of the said specification, and to the following words near the end of the specification: 'In such cases, however, where cheapness is an object, the tar-paper may be omitted and the blocks formed without interposing anything between their joints, as previously described. In this latter case the joints soon fill up with sand or dust, and the pavement is rendered sufficiently tight for many purposes, while the blocks are detached from each other and can be taken up and relaid, each independent of the adjoining blocks.' Your petitioner hereby disclaims the forming of blocks from plastic material without interposing anything between their joints while in the process of formation. Your petitioner owns the said patent and the whole interest therein, except in the following places or territory, for which he has granted exclusive licenses under royalty, or sold rights under said patent, to wit: the Counties of Kings, Queens, and Richmond, New York State; Hartford County, Connecticut; the District of Columbia; the States of New Jersey, Georgia, Maryland, Louisiana, Texas, Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, and Illinois, which above named States and places comprise all the territory for which he has sold or granted exclusive licenses or rights in or under said patent, to the best of his recollection, knowledge and belief."

The words specifically disclaimed by the disclaimer are embraced in brackets in the copy of the specification of the reissue above set forth.

The Schillinger patent has been before several of the Circuit Courts of the United States, and also before this court, for adjudication.

In the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, before Judge Shipman, in February, 1877, in Schillinger v. Gunther, 14 Blatchf. 152, and 2 Ban. & Ard. 544, and 11 Pat. Off. Gaz. 831; and in the same case, before Judge Blatchford, in August, 1879, 17 Blatchf. 66, and 4 Ban. & Ard. 479, and 16 Pat. Off. Gaz. 905; in the Circuit Court for the District of California, before Judge Sawyer, in May, 1881, in California Artificial Stone Paving Co. v. Molitor, and The Same v. Perine, 7 Sawy. 190, and 8 Fed. Rep. 821, and 20 Pat. Off. Gaz. 813; in the Circuit Court for the Northern District of New York, before Judge Blatchford, in July, 1883, in Schillinger v. Greenway Brewing Co. 21 Blatchf. 383, and 17 Fed. Rep. 244, and 24 Pat. Off. Gaz. 495; and in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Ohio, before Judge Sage, in June, 1884, in Kuhl v. Mueller, 21 Fed. Rep. 510, and 28 Pat. Off. Gaz. 541, the patent was sustained. In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in general term, in July, 1885, in Schillinger v. Cranford, 2 Cent. Rep. 680, 4 Mackey, 450, and 37 Pat. Off. Gaz. 1849, it was held void, on the question of novelty. It was also interpreted by Judge Sawyer, in the Circuit Court for the District of California, in California Artificial Stone Paving Co. v. Freeborn, in January, 1883, 8 Sawy. 443, and 17 Fed. Rep. 735, and by Judge Deady, in the Circuit Court for the District of Oregon, in August, 1887, in Schillinger v. Middleton, 31 Fed. Rep. 786.

The patent was before this court in California A. S. Paving Co. v. Molitor, 113 U. S. 609 [28:1106], in March, 1885, but only on a question of contempt, and in California A. S. Paving Co. v. Schalicke, 119 U. S. 401 [30:471], in December, 1886.

We are of opinion that the proper construction of the reissued patent is, that the invention consists in dividing the pavement into blocks, so that one block can be removed and repaired without injury to the rest of the pavement, the division being effected by either a permanent or a temporary interposition of something between the blocks. Concrete pavement had been laid before in sections, without being divided into blocks. The effect of the disclaimer was to leave the patent to be one for a pavement wherein the blocks are formed by interposing some separating material between them. To limit the patent to the permanent interposition of a material equivalent to tar-paper, would limit the actual invention. The use of a bottom layer of coarse cement, and placing on it a course of fine cement, and dividing the upper course into blocks by a trowel run partially or wholly through the upper course while it is plastic, in a line coincident with the joints between the sections in the lower layer, accomplishes the substantial results of Schillinger's invention, in substantially the way devised by him, and is within the patent as it stands after the disclaimer. The disclaimer took out of the first claim of the reissue only so much thereof as claimed a concrete pavement made of the plastic material laid in detached blocks, without interposing anything in the joints in the process of formation, leaving that claim to be one for such a pavement laid in detached blocks, when free joints are made between the blocks, by interposing permanently or temporarily between them, in the process of their formation, tar-paper or its equivalent.

In California A. S. Paving Co. v. Schalicke, supra, it was said, p. 406 [472]: "The evidence in the present case shows that the defendant, during the process of making his pavement, marked off its surface into squares. But the question is whether he, to any extent, divided it into blocks, so that the line of cracking was controlled, and induced to follow the joints of the divisions, rather than the body of the block, and so that a block could be taken out, and a new one put in its place, without disturbing or injuring an adjoining block. The specification makes it essential that the pavement shall be so laid in sections 'that each section can be taken up and relaid without disturbing the adjoining sections.' Again, it says that the joint between the blocks 'allows the several blocks to heave separately, from the effects of frost, or to be raised or removed separately, whenever occasion may arise, without injury to the adjacent blocks.' This is essential; and, in all the cases where infringement has been held to have been established, there have been blocks substantially separate, made so by the permanent or temporary interposition of a separating medium or a cutting instrument, so that one block could upheave or be removed without disturbing the adjoining blocks. The patentee, in the disclaimer, expressly disclaimed 'the forming of blocks from plastic material without interposing anything between their joints while in the process of formation.' It appears that the defendant laid his pavement in strips from the curb of the sidewalk inward to the fence, in one mass, and then marked the strip cross wise with a blunt marker, which is made an exhibit, to the depth of about one sixteenth of an inch. But it is not shown that this produced any such division into blocks as the patent speaks of, even in degree. There were no blocks produced, and, of course, there was nothing interposed between blocks. The mass underneath was solid, in both layers, laterally. So far as appears, what the defendant did was just what the patentee disclaimed. The marking was only for ornamentation, and produced no free joints between blocks, and the evidence as to the condition of the defendant's pavements after they were laid shows that they did not have the characteristic features above mentioned as belonging to the patented pavement."

In its decision in the present case, which was made before that in the Schalicke case, the court said that the case was in no way different, so far as infringement was concerned, from the cases against Perine and Molitor and the case against the Greenway Brewing Company.

In the Schalicke case it was said, in the opinion of this court, in regard to the pavement in the Molitor case: "The defendant's pavement was made by cutting a lower course into sections with a trowel, to a greater or less depth, according to the character of the material, making a joint, and doing the same with an upper course, the upper joint being directly over the lower joint. Into the open joint, in each case, was loosely put some of the partially set material from the top of the laid course, answering the purpose of tar-paper. A blunt and rounded joint-marker, which was said to be $\frac{1}{16}$ or $\frac{1}{8}$ of an inch in depth, was then run over the line of the joints, marking off the block. The pavement was weaker along the line of the joint than in any other place. This was held to be an infringement." It was also there said that, in the Greenway Brewing Company case, "it was held that the 2d claim of the reissue was infringed by a concrete pavement which had an open cut made by a trowel entirely through two courses of material, the line of cut in the upper course being directly over the line of cut in the lower course, and that the interposition of the trowel, though temporary, was an equivalent for the tar-paper, even though the joint was left open after the trowel was removed, and was not made tight."

In the present case, the only pavement for which the defendant was held liable was what was called in his account or statement before the master "concrete flag pavement," the manner of constructing which is thus described by Mr. Perkins, a witness for the plaintiff: "First, joists are placed seven to eight feet apart, in front of the property where the work is to be laid. First, one stone is formed by placing a joist across between the others at right angles, generally at about four feet from the place of beginning. In this space a mortar, composed of sand, gravel and cement, is put and thoroughly tamped, so that the coarse material will be from three to four inches in thickness, leaving about one half inch on top for a mortar composed of sand and cement, which is troweled off and made even with the top surface of the joints. Then the short joist that is put in at right angles, as before described, is taken up and placed about the same distance as before, and again filled in. The finer material in the coarse concrete is generally worked next to the joist, so as to make a good, smooth, strong edge. When the top stuff is put on this last stone, and finished over on top with a trowel, the joint between the two stones being marked on the outer joist, a trowel is drawn through the top stuff, to make a joint straight, to correspond with the joint below." The evidence is satisfactory, that the trowel was used to cut through or into the top layer to an extent sufficient to make such a separation of the top layer into blocks, at a line corresponding with the joint below between the sections of the first layer, as to control the cracking of the top layer, by dividing it substantially into separate blocks. This division depends on the depth of the cut. The defendant contends that the object and effect of the marking with the trowel was only to give to the pavement the appearance of flagging; but the evidence is entirely clear that the cut was made sufficiently deep, in proportion to the thickness of the upper layer, to make such a separation of the upper layer into blocks as would compel any tendency to crack to follow the line of the cut made by the trowel, and not run off into the body of the layer; and that thus the object of Schillinger's invention was attained. The defendent is, by the report of the master and the decree of the circuit court, made liable only for concrete flagging so laid and cut as to produce such result. The defendant was particular to have the cut in the upper layer made with the trowel directly over the line between the two sections of the lower layer, and it is shown that the upper layer of his pavement thus made would come up in separate blocks. He made his lower course of sand, gravel and cement, mixed in the proportions of one part of cement to six or seven of sand and gravel, while he made his upper course of one half sand and one half cement, made plastic with water. The lower course of his flagging was composed of material in which there was only one part of cement or adhesive substance to six or seven parts of nonadhesive substance, and there was but a slight tendency to adhere between the faces of the two sections in the lower course; while as the upper layer was composed one half of adhesive substance, the tendency was for its material to adhere strongly. Therefore, a cut in the upper course, coincident with the joint below, would permit any action of the settling of the lower course, through frost or upheaval, to extend to the top of the upper course through a joint cut in that course, of sufficient depth to prevent the tendency of the upper course to crack in its body rather than in the line of the cut.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the first claim of the reissue, as it stands after the disclaimer, is infringed, because the defendant's pavement is a concrete pavement, laid in detached blocks or sections, substantially in the manner shown and described in the specification of the reissue, the detached blocks in the upper course being the equivalent of the detached blocks or sections of the Schillinger pavement; and that the second claim of the reissue is infringed, because the temporary use of the trowel or cutting instrument, to divide the upper course into blocks, is the equivalent of the tar-paper of the Schillinger patent, the cutting making a division which controls the cracking, and facilitates the taking up and relaying of the blocks or sections in the upper course "without disturbing the adjoining sections," and the trowel being interposed to effect its object during the process of forming the pavement on the spot where it is to remain.

The invention of Schillinger was a very valuable one The evidence is that it entirely superseded the prior practice of laying concrete pavements in a continuous, adhering mass.

The defendant introduced in evidence, on the question of novelty, the following patents: English patent to Claridge, No. 7489, of 1837; English patent to D'Harcourt, No. 7991, of 1839; United States patent to Russ, No. 5475, of 1848; English patent to Chesneau, No. 350, of 1852; English patent to Coignet, No. 2659, of 1855; English patent to De la Haichois, No. 771, of 1856; and United States patent to Van Camp, No. 93,142, of July 27, 1869. All of these patents, except the Van Camp patent, were introduced in evidence on the part of the defense in the case against the Greenway Brewing Company, and it was held in that case that none of them anticipated the Schillinger invention. A copy of the record in that case, embracing the pleadings, and the evidence and patents put in by the defendant in it, on the question of novelty, forms part of the record in the present case.

An examinaton of the patents put in evidence by the defendant, in connection with the testimony in regard to them, shows that the Claridge pavement was not a concrete pavement, and was not formed in detachable blocks, but was a continuous asphalt pavement; that the D'Harcourt pavement was not a concrete pavement laid in detached blocks or sections, nor could one section be removed without disturbing adjacent sections; that the Russ patent shows a concrete foundation for a stone pavement, the pavement proper being constructed of granite or syenite placed on top of the concrete foundation, such concrete foundation not being formed in detachable blocks, but only being provided at certain places with removable panels, consisting of frames filled with concrete, to be lifted out to give access to water pipes or for other purposes; that the Chesneau pavement was not a concrete pavement laid in detached sections or blocks, but was a continuous pavement, provided with panels to give access in certain places to gas and water pipes, the panels being made of sections set in frames, which were removably inserted in the surrounding pavement, and there was no arrangement of tar-paper or its equivalent between adjoining blocks of concrete, for the purpose set forth in the Schillinger patent; that the Coignet patent did not show a concrete pavement, made in detachable blocks after the manner of Schillinger's, and built on the ground where it was to remain; that the De la Haichois pavement was not a concrete pavement laid in detachable blocks or sections, or having the arrangement of tar-paper or its equivalent between adjoining blocks of concrete like that of Schillinger; and that the Van Camp patent showed only blocks formed in moulds, and removable from the moulds, or the pavement to be laid cemented in the molds, and it not being stated that the blocks should be formed on the spot where they were to remain, nor that they should be formed of cement and gravel or sand. It further appears that, in the Van Camp patent, when the blocks are made in moulds, they are like bricks, or artificial stones, or wooden blocks, which are prepared and then brought to the place where they are to be laid and put down in the usual manner; and that when the blocks remain in the moulds and are thus laid, they do not present a uniform wearing surface of concrete, or constitute a concrete pavement formed in detachable blocks by joints.

Other testimony as to prior public use was introduced in this case, taken from the record in the case of Schillinger v. Philip Best Brewiny Co., in the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, which testimony was also introduced in the case against the Greenway Brewing Company, having been taken in November, 1882. In the decision in the latter case, it was correctly said of that testimony: "So far as it refers to prior use in Germany, not shown in a patent or printed publication, it was duly objected to in this case and must be excluded. As to the cement malt floor which Row laid in Baltimore twenty-five years ago, he shows that it was not made in sections detachable by free joints. The testimony of Botzler as to a prior malt floor laid by him in Chicago is too indefinite to amount to sufficient evidence to defeat a patent." So far as that testimony related to a pavement used in Germany, it was objected to at the time it was introduced in this case, as incompetent. It was clearly inadmissible under section 4923 of the Revised Statutes, because it did not show anything that had been patented or described in a printed publication.

We do not think that the reissued patent, as it stood after the filing of the disclaimer, was open to the objection that it was not for the same invention as that of the original patent. Whatever there was of objectionable matter inserted in the specification or the first claim of the reissue, when it was granted, was removed by the disclaimer. The re-issue was granted within ten months after the original. The single claim of the original patent was repeated in the reissue as the second claim of the latter; and the first claim of the reissue, as it stood after the disclaimer, did not expand beyond the claim of the original what was claimed in the reissue.

As to the amount of the decree, we think the court properly awarded the sum of 4 cents per square foot as the profits of the defendant, and that it was right to give to the plaintiff the entire profits made by the defendant by the laying by him of his concrete flagging, in view of the testimony in the case. It clearly appears that the defendant's concrete flagging derived its entire value from the use of the plaintiff's invention, and that if it had not been laid in that way it would not have been laid at all.

In Elizabeth v. Nicholson Pavement Co. 97 U. S. 126, 139 [24:1000,1006], it is said that "When the entire profit of a business or undertaking results from the use of the invention, the patentee will be entitled to recover the entire profits if he elects that remedy." This language was quoted with approval in Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 189, 208 [26: 975, 980]. As in the case of the Nicholson patent, so in the case of the Schillinger patent, the pavement was a complete combination in itself, differing from every other pavement, and the profit made by the defendant was a single profit derived from the construction of the pavement as an entirety. Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 665, 666 [ante, 547, 562].

Within the decision in Garretson v. Clark 111 U. S. 120 [28: 371], the proof in this case is satisfactory, that the entire value of the defendant's pavement, as a marketable article, was properly and legally attributable to the invention of Schillinger.

The decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

JOHN HASKELL BUTLER, Admr., ET AL., Appts.,
v.
THE BOSTON AND SAVANNAH STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

SAME v. SAME.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 527–558.)

Limited liability of ship owners—libel for limited liability a bar to other actions—Act of February 28, 1871—extent of the law—effect of state statute—disaster within county limits—liability for death.

1. The law of limited liability of ship owners applies to cases of personal injury and death, as well as to cases of loss of, or injury to, property. It extends to liability for every kind of loss and injury.

2. Proceedings taken by the owner of the vessel, by libel for limited liability, are a bar to actions commenced to recover damages for losses sustained by means of the stranding and sinking of the vessel.

3. The Act of February 28, 1871, to provide for the better security of life on board of steam vessels, does not supersede or displace the proceeding for limited liability, in cases arising under its provisions.

4. The law of limited liability was enacted by Congress as a part of the maritime law of this country, and, in its operation, extends wherever public navigation extends.

5. A statute of a State cannot neutralise or affect the admiralty or maritime jurisdiction or the operation of the maritime law in maritime cases.

6. The Limited Liability Act applies to the present case notwithstanding the disaster happened within the technical limits of a county of Massachusetts, and notwithstanding the liability itself may have arisen from a state law.

7. This court expresses no opinion as to whether a state law can create a liability in a maritime case, within the dominion of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, where neither the general maritime law nor an Act of Congress has created such a liability.

Argued April 10, 11, 1889. Decided April 22, 1889.

APPEALS from decrees of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, affirming decrees of the District Court, one of them dismissing a libel against a steamship company to recover damages for death, and the other decreeing that the libelant is entitled to the limitation of liability for loss of life and other damage, and that the exceptions of the respondents to the libel be overruled. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank Goodwin and Eugene P. Carver, for appellants:

The law regards the rights of passengers and holds the carrier to the highest degree of care possible and requires him to make good all damages suffered through want of that care.

The liability of owners is not restricted by the Act of Congress providing for the security of passengers on steamboats. The Act does not take away any common-law liability.

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court:

These two cases are so intimately connected, both in the proceedings and in the questions arising therein, that it will be most convenient to consider them together. They arose out of the stranding, sinking and total loss of the steamship City of Columbus, on Devil's Bridge, near Gay Head, at the western extremity of Martha's Vineyard, and near the mouth of Vineyard Sound, on the 18th of January, 1884. Most of the passengers and cargo were lost, and amongst the passengers lost was Elizabeth R. Beach, a single woman, of Mansfield, in the State of Connecticut. The appellants represent her, Nathaniel Beach being appointed administrator of her estate in Connecticut, Butler being appointed ancillary administrator in Massachusetts, and the other two appellants being, one an aunt, and the other a niece of the deceased, dependent on her for support. The appellees, The Boston and Savannah Steamship Company, were the owners of the ship.

Soon after the disaster occurred, and early in February, 1884, one Brown and one Vance commenced each of them an action at law against the steamship company, in the Superior Court of the County of Suffolk, in Massachusetts, to recover damages for losses alleged to have been sustained by them by means of the stranding and sinking of the vessel. Thereupon the steamship company, on the 18th of February, 1884, in order to obtain the benefit of the law of limited liability, filed a libel in the District Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts, against the said Brown and Vance, and against all other persons who had suffered loss or damage by said disaster. This is one of the cases now before us on appeal. The libel was in the usual form of libels in causes of limited liability. It set forth the ownership of the vessel, the business in which she was employed, namely, as a passenger and freight steamship between Boston and Savannah, her sea-worthiness, her being well and thoroughly officered and manned and furnished and equipped as the law required. It stated that on the 17th of January, 1884, she left Boston on a voyage to Savannah, having on board about 83 passengers and considerable merchandise, a list of the former, as far as known, and a schedule of the latter, being annexed to the libel. It stated that whilst prosecuting said voyage, and while on the high seas, to wit, in or near Vineyard Sound, the steamship struck on the rocks near and off the shore at Gay Head, in Martha's Vineyard, in the district of Massachusetts, about half past three in the morning of January 18th, 1884, and in a very few minutes thereafter heeled over, filled with water, and sunk, becoming a total wreck and loss; that most of the passengers and crew, about 100 in number, were drowned and lost, those surviving claiming to have suffered great injury, and that all the property and effects of the passengers and crew, and all the cargo on board (except a small part, salved in a damaged condition, and of little value), together with said steamship, its machinery, tackle, apparel and furniture, were destroyed and lost.

The libel propounded other articles, as follows, to wit:

"Fifth. All said great loss of life, injury and damage to persons on board, and loss of and damage to property, were occasioned and incurred without the privity or knowledge of the libelant, the owner of said steamship.

Sixth. The libelant further alleges that, as it is informed and believes, certain persons or corporations, owners or insurers of property on board, and lost or damaged by and at the loss of said steamship as aforesaid; certain other persons, who claim to have been on board said steamship at the time of the loss aforesaid, and to have suffered in consequence thereof injuries and damage to their persons and property; and still other persons, claiming to represent persons drowned and lost in said disaster, and claiming to be entitled to recover and receive large sums of money on account of the death of and injury to said persons so represented by them—all make, or may hereafter make, claim that the striking upon the rocks, and sinking and wreck of said steamship, and the loss of life, damage to persons and property aforesaid, were occasioned and incurred from the fault and neglect of the libelant, or its officers and agents, and that the libelant is liable and responsible to pay to them the loss and damages arising as aforesaid; all of which claims and allegations the libelant denies, and, on the contrary, it alleges that all such losses and damages were occasioned or incurred without its neglect, fault, privity or knowledge, and, as it is informed and believes, without the neglect or fault of its officers or agents, or any of them."

"Eighth. The losses and damage to persons and property incurred and occasioned by the said stranding, sinking, and loss of said steamship, and the alleged claims and liabilties made against the libelant, by reasen thereof, greatly exceed the amount or value of the interest of the libelant, as owner, in said steamship, her machinery, tackle, apparel and furniture, immediately after said loss, and in her freight then pending. Upon and after the happening of said loss, said steamship, her machinery, tackle, apparel and furniture, became a wreck and total loss, and, the libelant is informed and believes, were then practically worthless, and the libelant's interest therein became and was of little or no value. The gross freight then pending on the voyage of said steamship to Savannah was of the value of about $1,000.

"Ninth. The libelant, while not admitting but denying that it is under any liablity for the acts, losses and damages aforesaid, and desiring and claiming the right in this court to contest any such liability of itself or of said steamship, claims and is entitled to have limited its liability, as owner therefor (if any such liability shall hereafter be found to exist), to the amount or value of its interest, as owner, in such steamship after said loss, and her freight then pending.

"Tenth. Said steamship, in her damaged and wrecked condition, now lies sunken near the shore at Gay Head, Martha's Vineyard, within this district, and within the jurisdiction and process of this honorable court."

The libelant thereupon claimed and petitioned that, in case it should be found that there was any liability for the acts, losses, and damages aforesaid, upon said steamship "City of Columbus," or the libelant as owner thereof (which liability the libelant did not admit, but expressly and wholly denied, and desired in that court to contest), such liability should in no event exceed the amount or value of the interest of the libelant, as owner, in said steamship and her freight then pending, as by law provided; and to that end the libelant prayed that all claims for loss, damage, or injury to persons or property by reason of the premises might be heard and determined in that court, and apportioned according to law, and that due appraisement might be ordered and made of the ship, her machinery and furniture, and of her pending freight at the time of the loss, offering to pay the appraised value into court or give proper stipulation therefor, and that monition in due form should issue against said Brown and Vance and any and all persons claiming damages by reason of the premises, citing them to appear, etc., and that all actions and suits concerning the matters set forth might be restrained and enjoined.

Upon the filing of this libel a monition was duly issued and published, and an injunction against actions and suits was granted, issued and published. The monition was returnable to the first day of July, 1884.

Notwithstanding these proceedings the appellants, on the 27th of September, 1884, filed a libel against the steamship company, in the same District Court for the District of Massachusetts, to recover damages for the death of said Elizabeth R. Beach. This is the other suit now before us on appeal. After stating the engagement of passage by Miss Beach on the steamship from Boston to Savannah, the character of the vessel as a coastwise sea-going steamship in the coasting trade, under enrollment and license, and the circumstances of the stranding and loss, and the drowning of Miss Beach, the libel of the appellants averred and charged that the disaster was caused by negligence on the part of those employed by the steamship company in managing the ship, and by inefficiency in the discipline of the officers and crew, and that no proper measures were taken to save the passengers. The libel further alleged that at the time of the disaster the second mate, one Harding, was in charge of the ship, and was not a pilot for those waters; that it was a part of his duty to take charge of the ship alternately with the first mate; that it was an omission of duty on the part of the owner to intrust to the second mate the charge of the ship without the aid of the special pilot; and that no pilot was on duty on the ship at the time of the accident. The libel further alleged that "There was not proper apparatus on the vessel for launching the boats;" "that the ship was not properly constructed in respect to bulkheads and otherwise;" and that there was unfitness, gross negligence or carelessness on the part of the servants and agents of the respondents engaged in navigating the ship, and in not taking proper measures to save the passengers, and as displayed in the inefficiency of the discipline of the officers and crew of the vessel; and that in respect to these matters there was negligence and carelessness on the part of the owner.

The libel further set out a statute of Massachusetts of the following purport, to wit:

"If the life of a passenger is lost, by reason of the negligence or carelessness of the proprietor or proprietors of a steamboat, or stage coach, or of common carriers of passengers, or by the unfitness or gross negligence or carelessness of their servants or agents, such proprietor or proprietors and common carriers shall be liable in damages not exceeding five thousand, nor less than five hundred dollars, to be assessed with reference to the degree of culpability of the proprietor or proprietors or common carriers liable, or of their servants or agents, and recovered in an action of tort, commenced within one year from the injury causing the death, by the executor or administrator of the deceased person, for the use of the widow and children of the deceased, in equal moieties, or, if there are no children, to the use of the widow, or, if no widow, to the use of the next of kin:"

The libel further alleged that after the vessel struck, said Elizabeth R. Beach suffered great mental and bodily pain upon the vessel and was afterwards washed into the sea and drowned; that the value of her clothing and baggage lost was $150; and that by virtue of the premises and under the general admiralty jurisdiction of the United States the libelants were entitled to recover $50,000, and by virtue of the statute of Massachusetts, $5,000.

The steamship company, thereupon, on the 10th day of October, 1884, filed an exception and plea to this libel, setting up in bar the record and proceedings of the cause of limited liability previously instituted by them in the same district court, and then pending.

To meet this exception, the appellants, on the 16th of December, 1884, filed an amendment to their libel, by way of replication, in which they claimed the benefit of the Steamboat Inspection Act, passed February 28, 1871 (Title LII of the Revised Statutes U. S.), which makes many regulations respecting the steam machinery and apparatus of steam vessels of the United States in the merchant service, navigating the waters of the United States and respecting their construction and manner of lading and accommodating passengers and merchandise, and the officers and crews with which they are to be manned, and requires sea-going steamers in the coasting trade when under way and not on the high seas, to be under the control and direction of pilots licensed by the steamboat inspectors, imposes penalties for loss of life through negligence and inattention, and gives damages to the full amount against the vessel and her master and owner to persons injured, if the injury happens through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of the law, or through any known defects or imperfections of the steaming apparatus, or of the hull. (Rev. Stat. Title LII, passim, §§ 4401, 4498.) The appellants averred that The City of Columbus was subject to this law, and when the catastrophe happened was within the waters of the State of Massachusetts, and not upon the high seas, and not under the control of a licensed pilot. They further averred that there was connivance, misconduct, or violation of law on the part of the owner in not providing or procuring the vessel to be under the control and direction of a licensed pilot, and that there was misconduct, negligence, and inattention to duty on the part of the captain, second mate, or other persons employed on the vessel, by which connivance, misconduct, and negligence the life of said Elizabeth R. Beach was destroyed.

On the same day, the 16th of December, 1884, the appellants appeared to the libel of the steamship company in the cause of limited liability, and filed a pleading which they entitled an Answer, Petition and Exceptions, and by which they set up substantially the same matter as had been averred in their libel and the amendment thereto; and in addition, they alleged that at the time of the disaster the steamer and her freight were substantially insured, and that the owners had received, or were entitled to receive, a large amount of money for said insurance, and would thereby be substantially indemnified for the loss of vessel and freight.

Afterwards, on the 19th of January, 1885, the appellants moved in the same cause that the steamship company be ordered to pay into court the said insurance money. To this motion the company filed a written reply in which they set up the fact that in pursuance of an order of the court they had entered into stipulation to pay into court the amount of the appraised value of their interest in the ship and freight. They further averred that, in pursuance of a covenant made at the time of their purchasing the said steamship, in the mortgage given for the purchase money, all the insurance procured by them had been assigned and made payable to the vendors and mortgagees, for whose benefit and security the policies were kept on foot; and said parties had collected the insurance money, and applied it in part payment of the mortgage notes, and the libelants, The Boston and Savannah Steamship Company, had not collected or received any part of it. To this answer the appellants filed an exception in the nature of a demurrer.

Upon these pleadings the parties agreed upon a statement of facts, which, after stating the titles of the two causes, was as follows, to wit:

"Statement of agreed facts.

"In the above entitled causes the following facts are agreed by the Boston and Savannah Steamship Company and John Haskell Butler, administrator, et al., party excepting to said libel of said company:

"First. All the allegations contained in the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, nineteenth, twenty-third, and twenty-fourth articles of the answer, petition and exceptions of said John Haskell Butler, administrator, et al., in said suit are true.

"Second. Except as relieved or affected by the Limited Liability Act of 1851 (U. S. Rev. Stats. §§ 4283–5) and the Rules of the United States Supreme Court thereunder, the libelant, ship owner, is liable for all loss and damage caused by the stranding of said steamship 'City of Columbus.'

"Third. In respect to the cause of the disaster alleged, the respondents claim, in addition to the concession by libelant, the B. and S. Steamship Company, of negligence on the part of their agents and servants, as above agreed, that at the time of disaster the second mate was in charge of the ship; that he was not a pilot for the waters upon which the ship was then going, and was not licensed as a pilot by the inspectors of steamboats; and that no pilot was on duty on said ship at the time of the disaster; and, further, that the disaster was owing to the unfitness, gross negligence, or carelessness of the servants or agents of the libelant, who were engaged in navigating the ship at the time of the disaster, so that the case was within section 6 of chapter 78 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts. The libelant denies all these allegations, and claims that they are immaterial to the issues of the cause, if true; and that the captain was in charge of the ship at the time of the disaster.

"Fourth. Said loss and damage were without the privity and knowledge of the libelant, The Boston and Savannah Steamship Company, the sole owner of said steamship.

"Fifth. Said steamship was a coastwise, seagoing vessel, under enrolment, and was, at and before the time of loss, subject to all the laws and rules of navigation applicable to such vessels; and at the time of loss was on a voyage from Boston to Savannah, Georgia, and proceeding through Vineyard Sound, stranding on Devil's Bridge, off and near Gay Head, Martha's Vineyard. And to this extent the respondents, Butler et al., qualify any admission in their answer to the third article of the libel of the company; and the company qualify any averment pertinent thereto in said article.

"Sixth. After the filing of the libel or petition in this cause, the court caused due appraisement to be had of the amount or value of the interest of the libelant, as owner, in such ship and her freight for the voyage, and thereupon made an order for the giving of a stipulation, with sureties for the payment thereof, into court, whenever the same shall be ordered; and upon due compliance with this order the court issued a monition, February 28, 1884, against all persons claiming damages for any such loss, embezzlement, destruction, damage, or injury, citing them to appear before the said court and make due proof of their respective claims at or before July 1, 1884, and public notice of such monition was given as required; and thereafter, on the application of said owner, the court made an order to restrain the further prosecution of all and any suit or suits against said owner in respect of any such claim or claims, all as provided in the admiralty rules of the United States Supreme Court.

"Seventh. The Boston and Savanah Steamship Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, and is located at Boston, in said State."

The following additional statement was agreed to in the action of the appellants, to wit:

"1. Except as relieved or affected by the Limited Liability Act of 1851 (U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4283–5), and the Rules of the United States Supreme Court thereunder, the respondent, ship owner, is liable for all loss and damage caused by the stranding of said steamship 'City of Columbus.'

"2. The respondent claims that the captain was in charge of the ship at the time of the disaster.

"3. Said loss and damage were without the privity and knowledge of the respondent, the Boston and Savanah Steamship Company, the sole owner of said steamship.

"4. Said steamship was a coastwise, seagoing vessel, under enrolment, and was, at and before the time of loss, subject to all the laws and rules of navigation applicable to such vessels; and at the time of loss was on a voyage from Boston to Savannah, Georgia, and proceeding through Vineyard Sound, stranding on Devil's Bridge, off and near Gay Head, Martha's Vineyard."

The two causes were argued together upon the pleadings and these statements of fact; and on the 10th of April, 1885, the following decrees were made, to wit:

In the suit of the appellants the following decree was made:

"This cause was heard upon libel and respondent's exceptions thereto, and upon agreed facts; and it appearing to the court that the record alleged in said exceptions exists, it is thereupon ordered, adjudged and decreed that the exceptions be sustained, and the libel dismissed with costs."

In the limited liability cause the following decree was made:

"It is found and decreed by the court that the libelant is entitled to the limitation of liability for loss of life, and other damage, as claimed in said libel; and that evidence tending to establish the facts, claimed by the respondents in clause three of the agreed facts on file, is immaterial, and therefore inadmissible; and that the allegations in the libelant's answer to respondents' motion that insurance money be paid into court are true; and it is thereupon ordered, adjuged and decreed by the court that the said respondents' exceptions to the libelants' answer to said respondents' motion that insurance money be paid into court, be overruled, and their said motion denied; and that the exceptions of said respondents to the libel be overruled, and their petition be dismissed."

These decrees were affirmed by the circuit court, and from the decree of the latter court the present appeal was taken.

We will first consider the principal point taken in the cause of damage, instituted by the appellants, to which the owners of the steamship pleaded the pendency of the proceedings in the cause of limited liability; and will then discuss the questions presented in both causes, and those which are peculiar to the cause last named.

In the former cause the principal point raised was, that the law of limited liability does not apply to personal injuries, and hence that the appellants were not bound to litigate their claim in the limited liability cause; but had a right to file a separate and independent libel. The appellants in their brief say:

"The single question thus presented is, whether the Act limiting the liability of ship owners applies to damages for personal injury and damages for loss of life, and thus deprives those entitled to damages of the right to entertain suit for recovery, provided that the ship owner has taken appropriate proceedings by libel or petition to limit his liability; in other words, whether the said Act extends to all damages for personal injury, and damages for loss of life."

It is virtually conceded that if the Limited Liability Act applies to damages for personal injury, and damages for loss of life, the proceedings taken by the steamship company by their libel for limited liability were a bar to the appellants' action; and that the controversy between the parties should have been settled in that cause. We shall, in the first place, therefore, examine that question.

If we look at the ground of the law of limited responsibility of ship owners, we shall have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that it covers the case of injuries to the person as well as that of injuries to goods and merchandise. That ground is, that for the encouragement of ship building and the employment of ships in commerce, the owners shall not be liable beyond their interest in the ship and freight for the acts of the master or crew done without their privity or knowledge. It extends to liability for every kind of loss, damage and injury. This is the language of the maritime law, and it is the language of our statute which virtually adopts that law. The statute declares that "The liability of the owner of any vessel, for any embezzlement, loss or destruction, by any person, of any property, goods or merchandise, shipped or put on board of such vessel, or for any loss, damage or injury by collision, or for any act, matter, or thing, [loss,] damage or forfeiture, done, occasioned or incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner, or owners, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel and her freight then pending." (Rev. Stat. § 4283. The word "loss" in the Statute of 1851 is printed "lost" in the Revised Statutes, evidently by mistake.) This is the fundamental section of the law. On this section the whole provision turns. And nothing can be more general or broad than its terms. The "liability . . . shall in no case exceed," etc. It is the liability not only for loss of goods, but for any injury by collision, or for any act, matter, loss, damage or forfeiture whatever, done or incurred.

Various attempts have been made to narrow the objects of the statute, but without avail. It was first contended that it did not apply to collisions. This pretense was disallowed by the decision in Norwich Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104 [20:585]. Next it was insisted that it did not extend to cases of loss by fire. This point was overruled in the case of Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578 [27:1038]. Now it is contended that it does not extend to personal injuries as well as to injuries to property. If this position can be maintained the value of the Act, as an encouragement to engage in the shipping business, will be very essentially impaired. The carriage of passengers in connection with merchandise is so common on the great highway between the old and new continents at the present day, that a law of limited liability, which should protect ship owners in regard to injuries to goods and not in regard to injuries to passengers, would be of very little service in cases which would call for its application.

The section of the law which follows the main section in the original Act, namely, sect. 4 of the Act of 1851 (constituting the two sections of 4284 and 4285 of the Revised Statutes), has been referred to for the purpose of showing that the Legislature had in view injuries to property only. That section provides that if there are several owners of merchandise damaged or lost on the voyage, and the value of the ship and freight is not sufficient to pay them all, the proceeds shall be divided pro rata between them, and gives to either party the right to take the proper proceedings in court to procure such distribution to be made. This section is an appendix to the principal section which limits the liability, and is added to it for the purpose of enabling the parties interested to carry out and secure the objects of the statute in the most equitable manner. It has respect to the legal proceedings to be had for carrying the Act into effect. It prescribes the rule, namely, pro rata distribution. Mention is only made, it is true, of owners of property lost or injured; but surely that cannot have the effect of doing away with the broad and general terms of the principal enactment, stated with such precision and absence of reserve. It is more reasonable to interpret the fourth section as merely instancing the owners of lost property for the purpose of illustrating how the proceeds of the ship and freight are to be distributed, in case of there being insufficient to pay all parties sustaining loss. The observations of Chief Justice Durfee, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, in the case of Rounds v. Providence & S. S. S. Co. 14 R. I. 344, seem to us very sensible and to the point. That was a case of injury to the person. The Chief Justice says: "There would be no doubt upon this point were it not for the next two sections, which make provision for the procedure for giving effect to the limitation. These sections, if we look only to the letter, apply only to injuries and losses of property. The question is, therefore, whether we shall by construction bring the three sections into correspondence by confining the scope of § 4283 to injuries and losses of property, or by enlarging the scope of the two other sections so as to include injuries to the person. We think it is more reasonable to suppose that the designation of losses and injuries in §§ 4284 and 4285 is imperfect, a part being mentioned representatively for the whole, and consequently that those sections were intended to extend to injuries to the person as well as to injuries to property, than it is to suppose that § 4283 was intended to extend only to the latter class of injuries, and was inadvertently couched in words of broader meaning. The probable purpose was to put American ship owners on an equality with foreign ship owners in this regard, and in the great maritime countries of England and France the limitation of liability extends to personal as well as to property injuries and losses."

We may also refer to the opinion of Judge Benedict in the case of The Epsilon, 6 Ben. 378, as containing a very full and able discussion of the question. It was the first decision made upon this particular subject.

We have no hesitation in saying that the limitation of liability to the value of the ship and freight is general; and that when the proceeds of the latter are insufficient to pay the entire loss, the object of the fourth section of the old law (the 4284th of the Revised Statutes) is mainly to prescribe a pro rata distribution amongst the parties who have sustained loss or damage. We think that the law of limited liability applies to cases of personal injury and death as well as to cases of loss of or injury to property.

This conclusion is decisive of the controversy arising on the libel of the appellants. For if the law applies to the case of personal injuries, it was then the duty of the libelants to have appeared in the cause of limited liability instituted by the owners of the vessel, and to have contested there the question whether, in the particular case, the owners were or were not entitled to the benefit of the law. Had the action of the appellants been first commenced, it would have been suspended by the institution of the limited liability proceedings; and the very object of those proceedings was, not only to stop the prosecution of actions already commenced, but to prevent other suits from being brought. Allegations that the owners themselves were in fault cannot affect the jurisdiction of the court to entertain a cause of limited liability, for that is one of the principal issues to be tried in such a cause. The beneficent object of the law in enabling the ship owner to bring all parties into concourse who have claims arising out of the disaster or loss, and thus to prevent a multiplicity of actions, and to adjust the liability to the value of the ship and freight, has been commented on in several cases that have come before this court, notably in the cases of Norwich Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104 [20: 585]; and Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578 [27: 1038]. It is unnecessary to enter again upon the discussion here.

It is contended, however, that the Act of February 28, 1871, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Better Security of Life on Board of Vessels Propelled in Whole or in Part by Steam, and for Other Purposes" (16 Stat. at L. 440), supersedes or displaces the proceeding for limited liability in cases arising under its provisions. We do not see the necessity of drawing any such conclusion. The Act itself contains no provision of the kind. It requires certain precautions to be taken by owners of coasting steam-vessels and those engaged in navigating them to avoid as far as possible danger to the lives of passengers. Amongst other things, by the 51st section of the Act (Rev. Stat. § 4401), it is provided that all coastwise sea-going steam-vessels "shall, when under way, except on the high seas, be under the control and direction of pilots licensed by the inspectors of steamboats." By the 48d section (Rev. Stat. § 4493) it is declared that whenever damage is sustained by a passenger or his baggage, the master and owner, or either of them, and the vessel shall be liable to the full amount of damage if it happens through any neglect or failure to comply with the provisions of the Act, or through known defects, etc. This is only declaring in the particular case, what is true in all, that if the injury or loss occurs through the fault of the owner, he will be personally liable, and cannot have the benefit of limited liability. But it does not alter the course of proceeding if the claim of limited liability is set up by the owner. If, in those proceedings, it should appear that the disaster did happen with his privity or knowledge, or, perhaps, if it should appear that the requirements of the steamboat inspection law were not complied with by him, he would not obtain a decree for limited liability; that is all. We say "perhaps," for it has never yet been decided, at least by this court, that the owner cannot claim the benefit of limited liability when a disaster happens to a coastwise steamer without his fault, privity, or knowledge, even though some of the requirements of the Steamboat Inspection Law may not have been complied with. The Act of Congress passed June 26, 1884, entitled "An Act to Remove Certain Burdens on the American Merchant Marine," etc. (23 Stat. at L. 53), has a section (§ 18) which seems to have been intended as explanatory of the intent of Congress in this class of legislation. It declares that the individual liability of a ship owner shall be limited to the proportion of any or all debts and liabilities that his individual share of the vessel bears to the whole; and the aggregate liabilities of all the owners of a vessel on account of the same shall not exceed the value of such vessel and freight pending. The language is somewhat vague, it is true; but it is possible that it was intended to remove all doubts of the application of the limited liability law to all cases of loss and injury caused without the privity or knowledge of the owner. But it is unnecessary to decide this point in the present case. The pendency of the proceedings in the limited liability cause was a sufficient answer to the libel of the appellants.

The question then arises whether the defense made by the appellants in the cause of limited liability instituted by the owners of the steamship is a good defense as set forth in the pleadings and the agreed statement of facts. The main allegation relied on by the appellants to bring the case within the Steamboat Inspection Law is, that the second mate was in charge of the vessel at the time of the accident, and that he was not a licensed pilot. The libelant owners deny this, and claim that it is immaterial if true. There is no proof on the subject. But suppose it were admitted to be true, how could the owners have prevented the second mate from being in charge? By virtue of his office and the rules of maritime law, the captain or master has charge of the ship and of the selection and employment of the crew; and it was his duty, and not that of the owners, to see that a competent and duly qualified officer was in actual charge of the steamer when not on the high seas. It is not alleged that the captain himself and the first mate were not regularly licensed pilots. They usually are such on all sea-going steamers; and in the absence of any allegation to the contrary, it will be presumed that they were so licensed.

The other allegations, "that there was not proper apparatus on the vessel for launching the boats," and "that the ship was not properly constructed in respect to her bulkheads and otherwise," are too vague and indefinite to form the basis of a judgment. Besides, these allegations are denied, and no proof was offered on the subject.

The several allegations that the disaster was owing to the unfitness, gross negligence, or carelessness of the servants or agents of the steamship company, who were engaged in navigating the ship at the time of the disaster, which allegations were made for the purpose of showing that the case came within the Massachusetts statute, were also denied, and not sustained by any proof. The bearing and effect of that law, however, are proper to be more fully considered.

We have decided in the case of The Harris-

bury, 119 U. S. 199 [30: 358], that no damages can be recovered by a suit in admiralty for the death of a human being on the high seas or on waters navigable from the seas, caused by negligence, in the absence of an Act of Congress, or a statute of a State, giving a right of action therefor. The maritime law, of this country at least, gives no such right. We have thus far assumed that such damages may be recovered under the statute of Massachusetts in a case arising in the place where the stranding of The City of Columbus took place, within a few rods of the shore of one of the counties of that Commonwealth; and have also assumed that the law of limited liability is applicable to that place. Of the latter proposition we entertain no doubt. The law of limited liability, as we have frequently had occasion to assert, was enacted by Congress as a part of the maritime law of this country, and therefore it is coextensive, in its operation, with the whole territorial domain of that law. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 104, 127 [20: 585, 593]; The Lottawanna, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 558, 577 [22: 654, 662]; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 29, 31 [26: 1001, 1003]; Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 578, 593 [27: 1038, 1044]. In The Lottawanna we said: "It cannot be supposed that the framers of the Constitution contemplated that the law should forever remain unalterable. Congress undoubtedly has authority under the commercial power if no other, to introduce such changes as are likely to be needed." p. 577 [663]. Again, on page 575 [662], speaking of the maritime jurisdiction referred to in the Constitution, and the system of law to be administered thereby, it was said: "The Constitution must have referred to a system of law coextensive with, and operating uniformly in, the whole country. It certainly could not have been the intention to place the rules and limits of maritime law under the disposal and regulation of the several States, as that would have defeated the uniformity and consistency at which the Constitution aimed on all subjects of a commercial character affecting the intercourse of the States with each other or with foreign States." In The Scotland this language was used: "But it is enough to say that the rule of limited responsibility is now our maritime rule. It is the rule by which through the Act of Congress, we have announced that we propose to administer justice in maritime cases." p. 31 [1003]. Again, in the same case, p. 29, we said: "But, whilst the rule adopted by Congress is the same as the rule of the general maritime law, its efficacy as a rule depends upon the statute, and not upon any inherent force of the maritime law. As explained in The Lottawanna, the maritime law is only so far operative as law in any country as it is adopted by the laws and usages of that country; and this particular rule of the maritime law had never been adopted in this country until it was enacted by statute. Therefore, whilst it is now a part of our maritime law, it is, nevertheless, statute law." And in Providence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co., it was said: "The rule of limited liability prescribed by the Act of 1851 is nothing more than the old maritime rule, administered in courts of admiralty in all countries except England, from time immemorial; and if this were not so, the subject matter itself is one that belongs to the department of maritime law." p. 593 [1044].

These quotations are believed to express the general, if not unanimous, views of the members of this court for nearly twenty years past; and they leave us in no doubt that, whilst the general maritime law, with slight modifications, is accepted as law in this country, it is subject to such amendments as Congress may see fit to adopt. One of the modifications of the maritime law, as received here, was a rejection of the law of limited liability. We have rectified that. Congress has restored that article to our Maritime Code. We cannot doubt its power to do this. As the Constitution extends the judicial power of the United States to "all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," and as this jurisdiction is held to be exclusive, the power of legislation on the same subject must necessarily be in the National Legislature, and not in the State Legislatures. It is true, we have held that the boundaries and limits of the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction are matters of judicial cognizance, and cannot be affected or controlled by legislation, whether state or national. Ch. J. Taney, in The St. Lawrence, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 522, 526, 527 [17: 180, 182, 183]; The Lottawanna, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 558, 575, 576 [22: 654, 662]. But within these boundaries and limits the law itself is that which has always been received as maritime law in this country, with such amendments and modifications as Congress may from time to time have adopted.

It being clear, then, that the law of limited liability of ship owners is a part of our Maritime Code, the extent of its territorial operation (as before intimated) cannot be doubtful. It is necessarily coextensive with that of the general admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and that by the settled law of this country extends wherever public navigation extends — on the sea and the great inland lakes, and the navigable waters connecting therewith. Waring v. Clarke, 46 U. S. 5 How. 441 [12: 226]; The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 53 U. S. 12 How. 443 [13: 1058]; Jackson v. The Magnolia, 61 U. S. 20 How. 296 [15: 909]; Commercial Transp. Co. v. Fitzhugh, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 574 [17: 107].

The present case, therefore, is clearly within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. The stranding of the "City of Columbus" took place on Devil's Bridge, on the north side of and near Gay Head, at the west end of Martha's Vineyard, just where Vineyard Sound opens into the main sea. Though within a few rods of the island (which is a county of Massachusetts) and within the jaws of the headland, it was on the navigable waters of the United States; and no state legislation can prevent the full operation of the maritime law on those waters.

It is unnecessary to consider the force and effect of the statute of Massachusetts over the place in question. Whatever force it may have in creating liabilities for acts done there, it cannot neutralize or affect the admiralty or maritime jurisdiction or the operation of the maritime law in maritime cases. Those are matters of national interest. If the territory of the State technically extends a marine league beyond the seashore, that circumstance cannot circumscribe or abridge the law of the sea. Not only is that law the common right of the people of the United States, but the National Legislature has regulated the subject, in greater or less degree, by the passage of the Navigation Laws, the Steamboat Inspection Laws, the Limited Liability Act, and other laws. We have no hesitation, therefore, in saying that the Limited Liability Act applies to the present case, notwithstanding the disaster happened within the technical limits of a county of Massachusetts, and notwithstanding the liability itself may have arisen from a state law. It might be a much more serious question, whether a state law can have force to create a liability in a maritime case at all, within the dominion of the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, where neither the general maritime law nor an Act of Congress has created such a liability. On this subject we prefer not to express an opinion.

The question relating to the insurance money received for the loss of the ship and freight has already been settled by our decision in the case of The City of Norwich, 118 U. S. 468 [30:184], and requires no further discussion here. This case is governed by that, so far as the claim to the insurance money is concerned.

The decrees in both cases are affirmed.

JESSE B. WILSON, Receiver of SQUIER & Co., Appt.,
v.
JAMES B. EDMONDS.

Partnership, when created—interest, rate of.

1. An agreement by which, in consideration of moneys loaned by defendant to a firm of brokers, they were to purchase for him at a discount, a certain class of securities, to be placed in his possession after purchase, and upon their collection, they were to reinvest the avails in like securities, and the profits received by defendant on the purchases were to be credited on the notes of the firm given for the moneys and interest, did not make defendant a member of said firm.

2. It was lawful in the District of Columbia to stipulate in writing for interest at 10 per cent.

Argued April 11, 12, 1889. Decided April 22, 1889.

APPEAL from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, dismissing a suit for an account and for the delivery up of securities or the payment of their proceeds. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. Willoughby and Enoch Totten, for appellant:

An agent cannot stipulate with his employer to receive an interest in the profits, other than gross profits, as a remuneration for his services, without thereby becoming a partner as to third persons.

Leggett v. Hyde, 58 N. Y. 272; Everett v. Coe, 5 Denio, 182; Pleasants v. Fant, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 120 (22:782).

Actual participation in the profits as principal creates a partnership as between the parties and third persons.

Even where the common purpose is to deal upon credit and incur debt, one partner cannot involve the other in transactions outside of the actual or apparent business.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 7th of June, 1884, Josiah H. Squier, of the City of Washington, doing business there as a banker and broker, under the name of J. H. Squier & Co., being indebted in a large amount, made an assignment of all his property to Jay B. Smith, for the benefit of his creditors. Afterwards, in the same month, Theron C. Crawford, a creditor of J. H. Squier & Co., brought a suit in equity, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, against Squier and Smith, to remove Smith from his position as assignee, and to have the estate settled. An order was made in that suit removing Smith and appointing Jesse B. Wilson receiver of the estate, for the purpose of administering its assets under the direction of the court. Squier died in September, 1884.

After the assignment to Smith and before the appointment of Wilson as receiver, James B. Edmonds filed in the Crawford suit a petition claiming that he was the owner of certain securities which were in a safe belonging to him in the office of the firm; and, by an order made in the cause, he was allowed to take possession of those securities, giving bond for the same. Thereupon, Wilson, as receiver, filed a bill in equity, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, against Edmonds. The bill alleged that Edmonds was not the owner of the securities; that he had been interested in business with Squier & Co. for a number of years; that the relations between Edmonds and Squier were defined by a written agreement, which in effect made Edmonds a partner with Squier in the business, down to the time of said assignment; that, in respect to two particular notes made by Squier & Co., and held by Edmonds, dated August 1, 1883, one for $40,000 and the other for $4,000, Squier & Co. did not owe to Edmonds the moneys named in them; that, during all the time mentioned, Edmonds had been drawing out from the firm large sums of money, as interest upon moneys which he claimed to have advanced or paid to the firm; that such payments of interest had been largely in excess of that allowed by law, in many instances as great as 1½ per cent per month; that such sums so paid as interest had been drawn from deposits made with Squier & Co. by persons who deposited their money with that firm and were still its creditors; and that Edmonds ought to refund the money so received by him as unlawful interest, if it should appear that he was not liable, as a partner with Squier, to pay all the debts of the firm.

The bill prayed that Edmonds might set forth in his answer when he first had any business relations with Squier, what they were, and how long they continued; that he might state what was the consideration for the two notes, and when it arose; and that he might set forth any written contract between him and Squier, in relation to any business transaction between them, and when and how he became possessed of the securities referred to, and the particulars of the payments of money by Squier & Co., or Squier, to him, both as principal and interest, and what moneys he had loaned or advanced to Squier & Co., for the purpose of buying or speculating in the purchase of vouchers of army or navy officers, and other securities, and the dates and amounts of all notes given to him by Squier & Co., and how much he had received in payment on said notes for principal, and how much for interest, and, if any such notes were given, when they were surrendered, and for what purpose and for what consideration.

The bill further prayed that the court would direct the said securities or their proceeds to be delivered or paid by Edmonds to the plaintiff, for the benefit of the creditors of Squier & Co., as having been the property of Squier & Co., which passed under said assignment; that, if it should appear that Edmonds was not a partner and as such liable to pay the debts of the firm, then a decree might be made against Edmonds for so much as had been paid to him by Squier & Co. as illegal interest upon money advanced or lent by him to Squier & Co.; and that an account might be taken between him and Squier & Co., to ascertain the true indebtedness, if any, of the firm to him.

The defendant put in an answer to the bill, claiming to be the owner of the securities in question, and stating that their total amount was about $28,443; that they consisted mostly of pay vouchers of the United States officers, which by custom had become a sort of commercial paper, having a market value; that a few of them were indorsed payable to Squier & Co., but all of them had been delivered to the defendant by Squier & Co. for a valuable consideration equal to their par value, and upon the promise by Squier & Co., that they would redeem the same or collect the money thereon for the defendant, or do what might be necessary to enable him to receive the money thereon; that, since the order of the court allowing him to take them, he had found about $9,000 of them to be of such doubtful value that he had, under an order of the court, tendered them to the receiver; and that of the residue (less than $20,000) some were of doubtful value. The answer denied that he had been interested in the business of Squier & Co. except as a creditor, and that he had ever been a partner in Squier & Co. or with Squier. He set forth his relations with Squier substantially as follows:

Early in April, 1879, Squier informed the defendant that the firm of J. H. Squier & Co., which was constituted of Squier alone, was borrowing money and paying 2 per cent a month therefor, to enable it to purchase certain securities, and that it wished to borrow additional moneys for the purchase of official pay vouchers, and would pay interest on such money at the rate of from 1 to 1½ per cent a month. Squier offered to borrow moneys from the defendant at such rate, but the defendant declined to make such loans, and informed Squier that he had no knowledge of Squier's responsibility, and that 10 per cent per annum was the highest rate of interest he had ever paid or received. Subsequently, Squier came to him with some of the pay vouchers, and urged him to receive the same as security for money to be lent to Squier to enable him to purchase such vouchers, and proposed that, for the money so lent, the note of Squier & Co. should be given, and interest paid at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, payable at the end of each month, and half as much more, to be applied on the principal in final settlement. It was also proposed by Squier that the securities so obtained should be delivered to the defendant, and should be surrendered by him as they matured, on payment of the money they represented, or by having others of like kind and amount substituted for them, provided payments were so made before the maturity of the notes given for the money borrowed. The defendant agreed to this proposal; and, from April, 1879, to April, 1882, he lent to Squier & Co. nearly $48,000, taking notes for each separate loan, at 10 per cent interest, and pay vouchers as security therefor. The loans were intended by the defendant to have amounted in the aggregate to only a small sum, but they finally aggregated a large sum, and, when he found that payments were not made as promised, he refused to make further loans, and took a memorandum to protect his title to the vouchers and his right to collect them. For each loan made by him to Squier & Co., a separate note was so taken, and the various notes were subsequently consolidated into the two notes for $40,000 and $4,000. Some time in 1882, there having been an extension given and a renewal of notes, and due credit given for all sums received from Squier & Co. to apply on the loans, both interest and principal, Squier & Co. agreed to pay off the debt entirely, at a time not later than the early spring of 1883. This not having been done, the defendant, on August 1, 1883, demanded a settlement from Squier & Co., but at the request of Squier & Co., consented to a further extension of six months as to $40,000 of the indebtedness, the defendant then holding the notes of Squier & Co. for $44,000, and pay vouchers as security therefor to about that amount. The interest on the notes had then been fully paid, and the debt had been slightly reduced by the monthly payments in excess of interest, made subsequently to April, 1882, the amount of which excess was less than $3,000. Renewal notes were given for the same total amount as those surrendered by the defendant, leaving for further consideration what exact amount should be credited, with the agreement that, by means of such credit and payments of money, $4,000 of the debt should be canceled within three months. Squier & Co. agreed that while the notes were running they would keep the securities fully equal to the debt, and when unable to pay from the profits the stipulated monthly sum to apply on the notes, then any sums collected on the vouchers should not be reinvested nor others taken in lieu thereof, but should be applied on the debt, and that the securities of the defendant and any collections thereon should be kept free from other transactions of the firm. No portion of the notes was thereafter paid, except the monthly sum of $540 at the end of each month, before the failure of Squier & Co. Meantime, because of the reduction of the debt, though it was slight, the defendant allowed Squier & Co., in the exchange of securities, to reduce their aggregate. In so doing, he confided in Squier as to the quality and amount of the substituted securities, and, on the failure of Squier & Co. was surprised to find that the amount of securities held by him was less than had been represented and less than the aggregate debt, and that many of them which had been represented to be good were worthless.

This agreement so made and dated August 1, 1883, was evidenced by the following written instrument, executed by J. H. Squier & Co. and the defendant: "This agreement witnesseth, that James B. Edmonds has delivered to J. H. Squier & Co. forty-four thousand dollars, for investment by the latter for the former in the purchase of pay vouchers, payable not later than six months from date of purchase, of officers in army, navy or civil service of the United States, and for reinvestment, upon collection by said Squier, in same kind of securities, but not unless they are purchased so as to yield to said Edmonds a net profit of one and one fourth per cent per month on forty thousand dollars and one per cent per month on four thousand dollars, and enough besides to pay said Squier & Co. for their services and for guaranteeing prompt payment of the vouchers. Said Squier & Co. guarantees the genuineness of each voucher he shall purchase, as well as its prompt payment, and the return to said Edmonds of said principal sum of forty-four thousand dollars over and above said profits, and may retain all profits above those going to said Edmonds as aforesaid. Said Squier & Co. shall transact all the business without charge. Said Edmonds shall keep possession of the vouchers to the extent of the principal invested and two per cent besides, and will exchange, as they become payable, for others of like kind or for cash. He may keep his safe therefor in banking house of said Squier free of charge. Said Squier & Co. give their notes to said Edmonds for $44,000 and interest at ten per cent, to wit: one for forty thousand dollars and one for four thousand dollars, of same date as this memorandum, and as a further guaranty and indemnity to Edmonds. This contract shall terminate upon notice by either party or upon death of either, and then all the moneys so invested shall be returned to said Edmonds, with interest to extent aforesaid; and in case of death of said Edmonds the money shall be paid to his present wife, if she survive him. All moneys that may be collected by said Edmonds on said vouchers and received shall be credited to said Squier & Co. on said notes."

The total amount of the loans made by the defendant to Squier & Co. amounted to nearly $48,000, and the total amount of the moneys paid by Squier & Co., or Squier, to the defendant in respect of such loans, for interest or principal, or for any other purpose, was less than $29,000. No sums were drawn out of the firm by the defendant or received from it, except such payments to be applied first upon interest and the residue upon the principal. The defendant never put any money into the firm or had any business transactions with it, except to make such loans, which were made to accommodate Squier & Co. and to enable them to purchase the vouchers, on condition that they should deliver them to the defendant as security for the loans. A note was given in every instance for the loan, bearing 10 per cent interest, which notes were surrendered to Squier & Co. whenever others were given in lieu thereof. The securities in question were delivered to the defendant from month to month, in lieu of others for the same or larger amounts surrendered to Squier & Co., it being usual for Squier & Co. to deliver a certain amount to him and to receive back others which had matured, of like or larger amounts; and occasionally the defendant intrusted small amounts to Squier & Co. for collection, upon the agreement to return a similar amount in a few days, to be purchased with the proceeds of the collection, according to the written agreement of August 1, 1883. A similar but briefer memorandum had been made in 1882 between the parties, which was given up with the old notes, to Squier & Co., on August 1, 1883. The total number of the notes given by Squier & Co. to the defendant was equal to the total number of the loans and renewals.

A replication was put in to this answer, and proofs were taken on both sides. The case was heard by the court at special term, before Mr. Justice COX, and a decree made dismissing the bill. A copy of the opinion of the court is furnished to us, but it does not seem to be reported.

It appears from the opinion that the grounds on which the bill was dismissed were that, although there may have been a partnership between the parties as to the particular venture or investment of the money in the securities in question, such a contract of partnership did not connect the defendant with the general business of Squier & Co.; that the contract was, that in consideration of certain moneys placed by the defendant in the hands of Squier, he would purchase for the defendant a certain class of securities, which securities were not to be mingled with the general business of Squier & Co., but were to be placed in the possession of the defendant and held by him; that no profits were to be received by the defendant except from this particular venture; that the property which the defendant's money was to buy was to be bought at a rate which would yield to the defendant a specified profit, and enough besides to pay Squier & Co. for their services and for guarantying prompt payment of the vouchers; that the property placed in the hands of the defendant was thus to be worth that much more than he paid for it, and his profit was to be derived from the identical securities which his money purchased; that the evidence showed that there was a large business done by Squier & Co. outside of the transactions with the defendant, in which business the defendant did not participate; that the parties connected with such other business had no concern with the transactions between the defendant and Squier & Co.; and that, although the relation between the defendant and Squier might be called a partnership relation, to the limited extent mentioned, it was not of such a character as to involve the defendant in the responsibility with Squier claimed in the bill.

The plaintiff appealed to the court in general term, which affirmed the decree of the special term; and from that decree the plaintiff has appealed to this court. No opinion was rendered by the general term, and it may therefore be assumed that it proceeded upon the grounds stated by Mr. Justice Cox.

We are of opinion that, upon the same grounds, the decree must be affirmed. In addition, it may be said that the evidence sustains the matters set up in the answer; that it is not shown that the defendant ever represented himself to be a member of the firm of Squier & Co.; nor does it appear that any creditor of that firm was ever informed or supposed that the defendant was such member, or gave credit to the firm, or had dealings with the firm on the understanding or belief that he was a partner. The dealings between the parties appear always to have been of the character mentioned in the written paper of August 1, 1883. In every case of an advance or loan of money by the defendant to Squier & Co. a note was given to the defendant for the amount, bearing 10 per cent interest, and pay vouchers for the same amount were placed in the hands of the defendant. The money lent by the defendant to Squier & Co., for which the notes were given, was to be invested in vouchers which were to be bought at a rate to net in the way of discount the profit designated in the agreement; but that profit was not intended to be a profit to the defendant in addition to the 10 per cent interest, for it was expressly provided that all moneys which might be collected by the defendant on the vouchers or received by him should be credited to Squier & Co. on the notes. This compelled a credit to Squier & Co., on the principal of the notes, of all the monthly sums paid by Squier & Co. to the defendant, and called "profits," over and above the amount necessary to pay to him 10 per cent interest on the aggregate amount of his loans; and the practical construction of the agreement by the parties was to the same effect—because the testimony of Edmonds shows that he had various settlements from time to time with Squier, in which prior notes that he had received from Squier for loans were surrendered to Squier, on the ground that they had been extinguished by the surplus of the monthly payments by Squier, over and above the amount necessary to pay to the defendant interest at 10 per cent on the moneys which he had lent to Squier. It was lawful to stipulate in writing for interest at 10 per cent. Rev. Stat. D. C. § 714.

Decree affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Appts.,
v.
JOSEPH M. CUMMING ET AL.

JOSEPH M. CUMMING ET AL., Appts.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

Act for the relief of Cumming, construction of—liability of the Government—acts of officers.

1. The Act of Congress of February 26, 1885, for the relief of Joseph M. Cumming and others, gave the Court of Claims jurisdiction of the particular demand named therein, and authorized it to give such judgment as, under the evidence, would be consistent with law.

2. Congress thereby intended that the court should determine the liability of the Government, by the settled principles of law. The only right waived by the Government was a defense based upon the Statute of Limitations.

3. Plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment against the United States in any sum for the wrongs complained of; for if the revenue officers, whose acts caused the injury, did nothing more than the law authorized them to do, neither they nor the Government would be liable in damages; while, if they acted illegally, they would be personally liable in damages, not the Government.

Submitted Jan. 4, 1889. Decided April 22, 1889.

CROSS appeals from a judgment of the Court of Claims, against the United States, for damages sustained by plaintiffs in consequence of certain acts of a Collector of Internal Revenue and other officers under him. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

These are appeals from a judgment against the United States in favor of Joseph M. Cumming and Hamilton J. Miller, surviving members of the late firm of J. M. Cumming & Co., formerly manufacturers, distillers, vendors, and exporters of whiskies and alcohols, for the sum of thirty-six thousand dollars, as the damages sustained by that firm in consequence of certain acts of Joshua F. Bailey, collector of internal revenue for the fourth internal revenue district of New York, and of other officers who served under or with him. The amount for which the plaintiffs asked judgment was $1,635,753.

The suit was brought under the authority of the following Act of Congress, approved February 26, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 639):

"AN ACT for the Relief of Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts.

"Be it enacted, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Joseph M. Cumming, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts, late copartners in the business of commission merchants and bonded warehousemen in the City of New York, be permitted to sue in the Court of Claims; which court shall pass upon the law and facts as to the liability of the United States for the acts of its officer, Joshua F. Bailey, by reason of the seizure, detention, and closing up of the commission houses and bonded warehouses of said copartners, for the breaking up and interruption of their said business, and for the seizure and detention of the property, books and papers in and connected with said business, by Joshua F. Bailey, collector of internal revenue for the fourth internal revenue district of said State or by said Bailey and other internal revenue officers. The United States shall appear to defend against said suit; and either party may appeal to the supreme court as in ordinary cases against the United States in said court; and said suit may be maintained, any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Approved, February 26, 1885."

It is evident that Congress intended to open the doors of the Court of Claims to the plaintiffs, so far as to permit them to sue the Government, unembarrassed by any defense of the Statute of Limitations, and to obtain an adjudication, based upon "the law and facts," as to the liability of the United States for the wrongs of which complaint is made. In other words, the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims was so enlarged as to embrace this particular demand and to authorize such judgment as, under all the evidence, would be consistent with law. Here, however, we are met with the suggestion that there is a general principle, applicable, as this court said, in Gibbons v. United States, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 269, 275 [19:453, 454], to all governments, which "forbids, on a policy imposed by necessity, that they should hold themselves liable for unauthorized wrongs inflicted by their officers on the citizen, though occurring while engaged in the discharge of official duties." Did Congress intend to abrogate this principle so far as the demands of the present plaintiffs are concerned? Did it invest the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to render a judgment against the United States upon its appearing that the revenue officers transcended the authority conferred upon them by law, or had exercised their authority in such manner as made them personally liable in damages to the plaintiffs? There would be some ground for an affirmative answer to these questions if the statute had not required the court to pass upon both the law and the facts "as to the liability of the United States." If the facts disclosed a case of unauthorized wrongs done to the plaintiffs by the revenue officers of the United States, the question, by the very terms of the Act, would still remain, whether the United States were liable, in law, for such damages as the plaintiffs had sustained. There would seem to be no escape from the conclusion that Congress intended that the liability of the Government should be determined by the settled principles of law. The only right waived by the Government was a defense based upon the Statute of Limitations. Erwin v. United States, 97 U. S. 392 [24:1065]; Tillson v. United States, 100 U. S. 43 [25:543]; McClure v. United States, 116 U. S. 145 [29:572].

It is said that the Act, professedly for the relief of the plaintiffs, would be unavailing, unless it is so construed as to relieve them from the operation of the rule laid down in Gibbons v. United States. A satisfactory answer to this suggestion is that if Congress intended to do more than give the plaintiffs an opportunity, in an action for damages brought in the Court of Claims, to test the question as to the liability of the United States, upon the law and facts, for the alleged wrongs of their officers, that intention would have been expressed in language not to be misunderstood. It is as if the plaintiffs asserted before Congress the liability, in law, of the Government for the damages they sustained, and Congress permitted them to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims in order that there might be a judicial determination of the question by that tribunal, with the right of appeal "as in ordinary cases against the United States in said court."

According to this construction of the Act, the plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment against the United States in any sum; for, if Collector Bailey and other revenue officers did nothing more than the law authorized them to do, neither they nor the Government would be liable in damages; while, if they acted illegally, they would be personally liable in damages, not the Government.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to render judgment in favor of the United States.

THE NEW YORK AND COLORADO MINING SYNDICATE AND COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

DAVID R. FRASER ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 611-623.)

Sufficiency of record—paper, when not in evidence—opinion of witness as to value—rental value, how shown—instructions to jury—interest as damages.

1. To obtain a reversal of a judgment it is necessary that the facts upon which such reversal is claimed should appear, from the record, sufficiently to be passed upon.

2. A paper handed to a witness, and read and used by him as a memorandum with which to refresh his recollection, is not thereby admitted in evidence.

3. A witness who has no such knowledge of the marketable condition, or rental value of property as would render his opinion of any use to the jury, beyond the merest guess or conjecture, is not entitled to give his opinion as to its rental value.

4. Where the defendant failed to show by any admissible evidence that there was any rental value for the silver mill mentioned, such rental value could be shown by proving the value or the amount of the ore delivered and milled.

5. It is error to give instructions to the jury applicable to evidence not admitted.

6. Where the machinery put in a mill is unfit for use, and by reason thereof there is a long period of delay in the operation of the mill, and there is no proof of its rental value, it is not error to instruct the jury that they may allow as damages interest on the cost of the mill for the time of the delay.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, to review a judgment entered upon a verdict in favor of plaintiffs in a suit on promissory notes and an account. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Lamar.

This writ of error is brought to review a judgment entered upon a verdict for $10,500 in favor of the defendants in error. The case originated in five different suits, brought by them against the plaintiff in error in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, the first on a promissory note made by it for $1,000, and also for $2,531.78 for the price of goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by them to it. The other four were suits on promissory notes given by the defendant to the plaintiffs for $1,500, $2,000, $1,500, and $4,000, respectively. Afterwards, upon motion of the defendant, these several suits, by order of the court, were consolidated into one. In obedience to this order, the plaintiffs filed a consolidated complaint setting forth these causes of action, the first five being the promissory notes just mentioned, and the sixth being for the goods, wares and merchandise stated as the second cause of action in the first of the aforementioned suits.

The defendant in its answers, original and amended, denied the alleged sale and delivery of the goods as set forth in the sixth cause of action, admitted that it had made the promissory notes sued on and that they were unpaid, but denied its liability thereon. The other defense consisted in the allegation of a special contract between the parties, plaintiffs and defendant, previous to the execution of the notes, and as consideration therefor, whereby the former agreed to manufacture and to sell to the defendant, for and at the price agreed, a roasting cylinder and the necessary apparatus connected therewith, described in the plea, and also to manufacture for and deliver to the defendant a twenty-stamp dry-crushing silver mill and its connected apparatus; and to erect and put the same in their places so as to be run and operated at the mine owned by the defendant in the county of———, State of Colorado, known as the——mine; all of which (cylinder, mill and connections) the plaintiffs warranted, when put in their proper places, under the directions of one Angus McKay, would properly and satisfactorily and in all ways subserve the purposes for which they were purchased by the defendant. The plea further alleged that the cylinder, mill and apparatus, when erected and put in their places, were defective in many particulars, so as to be unfit for the uses for which they were designed, and that by reason of these defects the consideration of the notes failed; and that, to remedy the same and make the mill operate with efficiency, the company was put to large expense for material and new machinery, and was subjected to great loss and damage by the long period of delay in the operations of the mill. The expenses and the special damage thus sustained were pleaded as a failure of consideration, set-off, counterclaim, and recoupment.

On the trial the plaintiff introduced as a witness William J. Chalmers, who testified as to the execution by the defendant of the promissory notes sued on, and further testified, in answer to questions asked, as follows:

"Q. Has the firm [meaning the plaintiffs] now any account, not including these notes, against the defendant?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. [Paper shown witness.] Look at that account and see whether this is a copy of the account.

"A. Yes sir.

"Q. State whether the articles mentioned in that account were ordered by the defendant. And, if so, when."

To which question counsel for defendant objected, on the ground that the items could not be proved wholesale by the list, but the objection was overruled by the court; to which ruling of the court defendant then and there excepted.

And thereupon the witness proceeded:

"A. They were ordered at various times, by letter and verbally, between the 25th day of July and December 30, 1882."

The witness then proceeded to read the paper handed him, showing an itemized statement of account aggregating $2,531.78. Said witness further testified as follows:

"Q. You may reckon the interest [on said account] from January 1, 1883, up to this time, at six per cent.

"A. $233.59."

To which question and answer the defendant objected, on the ground that it was immaterial, but the objection was overruled by the court; to which ruling defendant then and there excepted.

The defendant introduced as a witness one George K. Sabin, who testified that his occupation for the past twenty years had been mining, and that he was in the employ of the defendant as superintendent at the time of the erection of the mill in controversy, and so continued until the mill was shut down. He further testified, inter alia, as follows:

"I have been engaged in mining twenty years, and am acquainted with stamp mills, quartz mills, and mining machinery.

"Q. What was the fair rental value of this mill and its attachments? And in giving your answer you can give it at so much per month, year, or such other division of time as may be most convenient and intelligible."

To this question counsel for plaintiffs objected, on the ground that it was not the proper measure of damages, and further, because the witness had not shown himself competent to speak on the subject; and the objection was sustained on the last mentioned ground by the court; to which ruling and decision of the court the defendant then and there excepted.

"Q. Have you been engaged about mills enough to know what work they perform—what they can do—what they can earn?

"A. I have of gold mills. This was the first silver mill I was connected with.

"Q. Do you know their cost?

"A. I think I do know something of their cost; have been engaged in their construction. The cost of this mill was about $75,000, inclusive of the machinery and everything connected with it.

"Q. What was the fair rental value per month of this mill and its attachments?"

To this question counsel for plaintiffs objected on the ground that the witness had not shown himself competent, and the objection was sustained by the court; to which ruling the defendant then and there excepted.

The said witness further testified that the defendant company operated a mine near this mill from which the ore was procured to run through said mill.

"Q. Was there sufficient quantity of ore in this mine, accessible, to employ the mill and keep it running to its full capacity?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How long have you been mining and been acquainted with ores?

"A. I have been mining since 1860.

"Q. Have you, during the same time, been acquainted with the milling of ores?

"A. Yes, sir. This mill at Columbus was the first silver mill I had been with; had been engaged in gold ores.

"Q. You have been acquainted to some extent with silver ores and silver mills?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What was the value of these ores delivered at the Columbus mill in this raw state, as taken from the mine ready to be melted? What was the value for milling purposes?"

To this question counsel for plaintiffs objected, and the objection was sustained by the court; to which ruling the defendant then and there at the time duly excepted.

"Q. Do you know of any silver mills of the same kind in that neighborhood?

"A. No, sir; there are none in that immediate neighborhood.

"Q. At what distance away do you know of any?

"A. Up in Leadville. I do not know of any in operation now. There was one in operation the other side of Leadville a year ago, in Soda Creek.

"Q. Do you know of any silver mills being rented at Leadville?

"A. I do not know of any being rented in the State anywhere?"

The defendant also introduced as a witness A. E. Smith, who, being duly sworn, testified that for twelve years he had been running stamp-mill works and quartz mills, and manufacturing assayers' supplies; that he had been in the employ of defendant, as foreman of the mill at Columbus, Colorado, from March, 1882, to December, 1883, and that he had aided in the erection of the mill in controversy. He also testified, in answer to questions as to the capacity and work of said mill, as follows, to wit:

"A. In the month of September (1882) we milled 721 cars of ore, which averaged 1,200 pounds each, which makes an average of 18 tons a day. In October we run 977 cars, which averaged 1,200 pounds each, averaging 19 tons a day and a fraction, and in November 1,117 cars, 22 tons per day; in December 902 cars, 18 tons a day.

"Q. Can you state the amount of ore that was milled during the months of March and April following?"

To this question counsel for plaintiffs objected on the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and the objection was sustained by the court; to which ruling and decision defendant excepted.

"Q. Can you give the amount of ore that was milled during the month of January?"

To this question counsel for plaintiffs objected, on the ground last above given, and the court sustained the objection; to which ruling and decision of the court the defendant then and there excepted.

"Q. What was the capacity of that mill per day upon that ore from September 4 to December 31, 1882, but for the defects in the cylinder and conveyors which have been described?

"A. We run 80 tons a day afterward.

"Q. With the mill in good working order, what would have been its capacity?

"A. 80 tons per day.

"Q. What was the worth of milling that ore per ton?"

Plaintiffs' counsel objected to this question, on the ground that it was immaterial and not the proper measure of damages.

By the court (to the witness):

"What was the cost?

"A. About six dollars per ton and a few cents."

The witness further testified as to the expense of operating the mill, the number and wages of the men, and cost of fuel, the number of days the mill was idle, wholly or partially, by reason of the defects complained of, the saving of wages by diminution of the working force when the mill was idle, and the extent to which employés were turned to other labor while the mill was not running, and was then further interrogated by counsel for defendant:

"Q. What wages would you have been compelled to pay to other men had you employed them to do that same work for which you paid these men, during the time the mill was stopped?"

To this question counsel for plaintiffs objected, and the objection was sustained by the court; to which ruling and decision of the court defendant then and there excepted.

The defendant also introduced as a witness one H. A. Hurlbut, who testified that he was a managing director of the defendant company in 1881 and 1882, and also testified, among other things, that one Riotti was a mining expert and a metallurgist, upon whom the defendant relied as to the best method of extracting silver from the ore; that upon his recommendation the white roasting furnace had been selected, and that defendant had employed the plaintiffs as machinists to erect it; that the defendant relied on said Riotti as to the proper process for the separation of the ores, but relied solely on the plaintiffs for the mechanical construction and erection of the machinery; and further, in answer to questions, testified:

"Q. What was Riotti directed or authorized to do about the specifications?

"A. He was authorized to give the draughtsman the incline of the hill—the room there was into the base of the retaining wall—the relative positions of where the stamps and the roasting cylinder were to be and where the furnace should be placed in position, and to give relative positions and distances.

"Q. Had he anything to do with the mechanical construction of the mill?

"A. No, sir."

The plaintiffs recalled, in rebuttal, the witness William J. Chalmers, who further testified:

"Hurlbut said that Riotti had been engaged by the New York parties as consulting engineer, as they wanted to hold some one responsible for the working of the ores. We were notified to comply with Riotti's directions. In looking over the original plan of the furnace the conveyors were shown in the plan, but Riotti said he preferred . . . desired us to follow the drawing in making the furnace. This drawing showed the conveyors, as afterwards put in the mill. We changed the original specifications; they were never accepted by the company, they refusing to accept them. We had the acceptance of Riotti of the plans."

At the conclusion of the testimony the defendant requested the court in writing to give to the jury the following instructions on the right of defendant to recoup damages in said cause:

"If the plaintiffs undertook to supply and put up, so it should be complete and in good running order, the mill or machinery mentioned in defendant's second defense, and entered upon the performance of such agreement, and if the machinery supplied proved defective and mechanically inadequate for the purpose intended, or was not complete nor executed in proper manner, or if the work was unskillfully performed, then, in this action, the defendant would be entitled to recover from the plaintiffs the damages actually sustained by reason of such failure of the plaintiffs to perform their agreement; and, in measuring the damages, if any, sustained by defendant, you may consider the loss of the use of the mill and machinery, either wholly or partially, resulting from such defects and unskillful performance; and any sums paid out by defendant in remedying defects and making repairs in such mill and machinery in consequence of such defects."

Which instructions the court refused to give; and to such decision and refusal the defendant then and there at the time duly excepted.

"In estimating defendant's damages in consequence of plaintiff's breach of their undertaking, if you find there was such a breach, you may also consider the necessary and immediate loss of profits incurred by the defendant during the period when the said defendant was, by reason of the alleged defects, deprived of the use of such mill and machinery."

Which instructions the court refused to give, and the defendant excepted.

After the conclusion of the evidence and the argument of counsel in said cause the court, of its own motion, instructed the jury as to the law of said cause; and on the question of the measure of defendant's damages, the court gave certain instructions, to the giving of which, and to each several proposition therein contained, defendant at the time duly excepted.

Mr. Henry Edwin Tremain, with whom were Messrs. Mason W. Tyler and James C. Spencer, on the brief for plaintiff in error.

No counsel appeared for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

The first and second assignments of error rest upon the same ground, and may be considered together. They are: first, that it was error for the court, upon the examination of the witness Chalmers (who was also one of the plaintiffs), to admit in evidence the paper handed him showing an itemized statement of account aggregating $2,531.78. It is contended that evidence of this character, "an unproved copy of an unproved account," was inadmisible to show the alleged sale and delivery of merchandise; and second, that the court erred in holding such inadmissible testimony to be sufficient evidence of an indebtedness to permit interest on it to be recovered, as testified to. The assumption of fact involved in these assignments, that the paper was admitted in evidence, is not sufficiently supported by the statement in the bill of exceptions.

To obtain a reversal of a judgment it is necessary that the fact, upon which such reversal is claimed, should appear from the record, sufficiently to be passed upon.

This bill of exceptions falls far short of a distinct statement that the paper was admitted in evidence; on the contrary, we think the import of the language is that it was not admitted, but that it was handed to witness and read and used by him as a memorandum with which to refresh his recollection of the articles mentioned in the account of plaintiffs. We do not think the court erred in allowing this to be done, and permitting his testimony to go to the jury for what it was worth.

The third assignment of error is, that the court erred in refusing to allow the witness Sabin, introduced in behalf of the defendant, to answer the question, "What was the fair rental value per month of this mill and its attachments?"

This ruling of the court was manifestly proper. It appears from the testimony of the witness himself that he knew of no other silver mill in the neighborhood of Columbus; that he knew of none whatever at that time in operation; that he knew of no silver mill that had been rented in Leadville or in the State anywhere; and that this was the first silver mill he had ever been connected with, though he had been engaged in mining for twenty years, and was acquainted with gold mills enough to know what work they can perform and what they can earn. He evidently had no such knowledge of the marketable condition or rental value of such property as would render his opinion of any use to the jury beyond the merest guess or conjecture. His knowledge and experience of mining mills was such as to render him competent to testify as to the cost of construction, the value of machinery, and the expense of putting it up; and upon these points his testimony was admitted, and was to the effect, among other things, that the mill cost $75,000.

The fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh assignments of error are based upon the rulings of the court on the objections of the plaintiff to the other questions propounded by the defendant to the witnesses Sabin and Smith.

It does not appear clearly from the bill of exceptions for what purpose these questions were propounded. Evidence to show that the capacity of the mill was 30 tons a day had been offered and received to prove the rental value of the mill, and perhaps very properly, as that might be a necessary preliminary fact leading up to the determination of its value for the rental. But after the defendant utterly failed to show, by any admissible evidence, that there was any rental value for a mill of that kind, we think the court did not err in holding that such rental value could be shown by proving the value or the amount of ore delivered and milled. If, however, the object of these questions (as counsel contends in his brief) was to prove the actual loss of use of the machinery during the period of stoppage, or the loss of the profits that would have accrued but for the defective machinery, the answers most favorable to defendant could only have tended to show losses too undefined to be subject to computation, and profits too remote and speculative to be capable of ascertainment. The ingenious argument of counsel fails to convince us that the court erred in sustaining the plaintiff's objections to the questions.

The ninth assignment of error is, that the court admitted the evidence of the declarations of one Riotti, with regard to the placing of the machinery of the mill, to go to the jury. The introduction of this evidence was objected to, upon the ground that Riotti was not an agent of the defendant in respect to the matters covered by these alleged declarations.

The objection does not seem to be valid. The witness testified that Riotti was authorized by defendant, in respect of the specifications in the contract between the parties, to give the draughtsman the incline of the hill—the room there was into the base of the retaining wall—the relative positions of where the furnace should be placed in position, and to give relative positions and distances. The witness Chalmers, being recalled, testified that "we were notified to comply with Riotti's directions. In looking over the original plan of the furnace the conveyors were shown in the plan. But Riotti said he preferred . . . desired us to follow the drawing in making the furnace. This drawing showed the conveyors, as afterwards put in the mill."

We think this direction or declaration of Riotti was made with reference to the very matters which, according to the testimony of Hurlbut and Chalmers, were directly within the scope of his authority and duty.

We do not deem it necessary to consider the questions whether the instructions requested by the defendant, as above set forth, and refused, are correct, as abstract propositions of law, with regard to the general principles governing the right of recoupment of damages. The bill of exceptions does not show any evidence tending to prove all the facts which these instructions assume to exist. The counsel for plaintiff in error presses the argument that the effect of the exclusion of the questions above mentioned shut out all evidence of the necessary and immediate loss of profits during the time when, by reason of the alleged breaches of the agreement, the use of the mill and machinery was lost to it. It would, in our opinion, have been error to give instructions applicable to evidence not admitted. The legal principles in those instructions, as requested, were, so far as they were founded on the evidence, substantially put before the jury in the general charge of the court.

The bill of exceptions states only so much of the charge as relates to the question of damages in the cause. The learned Judge having, as we are authorized to assume, fairly left to the jury the facts as to the alleged breaches of the contract, instructed them that, if they found the defendant entitled to deduct from the plaintiffs' claim its damages resulting from the delay in the operations of the mill caused by the defective machinery, it was undoubtedly entitled to deduct therefrom the rental value of the mill. Recapitulating the evidence on this point, he then instructed the jury that, in the absence of all evidence as to the rental value, they were at liberty to allow interest on the investment; and that it was shown in evidence that the mill cost $75,000; so that, if they found that the defendant was entitled to damages for delay in running the mill, they would properly allow interest at 10 per cent per annum (which was the statutory rate in Colorado, Gen. Stat. Col. 1883, § 1706) for the time of the delay as proven. He instructed them further, that there was more in the way of damages shown in the wages of the men employed in the mill whose time was lost while the mill was idle; and that for this loss of time, during which they were receiving wages from the defendant, the amount so paid could be added as an element of damages to be deducted from the plaintiffs' demand.

We think the law of the case was fully disclosed to the jury, and that fuller or more specific instructions were not required.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

THE STILLWELL AND BIERCE MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Plff. in Err., v. AMOS PHELPS.

Damages on unfulfilled contract—rule—notice—opinion, when admissible.

1. Where there was an agreement by plaintiff to furnish machinery and to put it in operation in defendant's mill, and one installment of the price was to be paid on the delivery of the machinery and before the completion of the work, defendant need not, in order to entitle him to avoid paying the whole contract price, or in order to recover damages for plaintiff's breach of contract, take out the machinery and interrupt his business to obtain new machinery elsewhere.

2. The rule of damages, where such machinery was improperly constructed, is to deduct from the contract price the cost of altering the construction of the machinery, so as to make it conform to the contract.

3. A notice given by defendant to plaintiff that if the latter does not put the mill in repair so that it will do good work, the former will do so and charge the expense to the latter, was sufficient to cover the necessary alterations to accomplish that end.

4. Whether a witness, called to testify to a matter of opinion, has such qualifications and knowledge as to make his testimony admissible, is a preliminary question for the judge presiding at the trial; and his decision of it is conclusive, unless clearly shown to be erroneous in matter of law.

Argued March 18, 1889. Decided April 15, 1889.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to recover for machinery put in a mill. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an action by an Ohio corporation against a citizen of Delavan in the State of Wisconsin, upon a contract in writing, by which the plaintiff agreed "to furnish and put in complete operation for the second party, in his flouring mill at Delavan aforesaid, one first class seventy-five barrel capacity roller mill complete," including certain machinery specified; "the first party to use all machinery, belting, etc., etc., now in said flouring mill that is in proper condition for use, except what is now in use on the rye and feed side of said mill; all of said mill, machinery, fixtures and apparatus to be new and first class in every way and of latest pattern, except as above specified, and to be completed and put in complete running order within ninety days from the date hereof"; and the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff "for the said mill, fixtures, etc., complete as above specified, and put in complete operation in his flouring mill at Delavan aforesaid," the sum of $9,000, as follows: $3,000 "upon the arrival of said mill and machinery at his mill in Delavan," $4,000 "when said mill is completed and in running order to the satisfaction of the second party," and the remaining $2,000 "within ninety days after the completion of the said mill as aforesaid, the first party to start the mill and see that it is in complete running order."

The complaint alleged the plaintiff's performance of the contract on its part, the defendant's payment of $3,272.47, and his refusal to pay the balance of $5,727.53, which the plaintiff sought to recover, with interest. The defendant in his answer set up by way of defense, and also under a counterclaim for $11,000, delay on the part of the plaintiff, and defects in the manufacture and design of the machinery furnished, whereby the defendant had been put to great expense to complete it so as to comply with the requirements of the contract, and had been deprived of the use of his flouring mill and injured in his business. The plaintiff filed a replication, denying all the allegations in the counterclaim.

At the trial, the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that the machinery was put in the defendant's flouring mill in compliance with the terms of the contract, except for a delay of several weeks, in part chargeable to the defendant's fault, and was tested in February, 1884, with satisfactory results.

On the question of the damages to which the defendant was entitled for the delay, the plaintiff called as a witness one Geissner, who testified that he was the owner and manager of a roller flouring mill of about seventy-five to one hundred barrels capacity in an adjoining county, and was personally familiar with roller mills and the milling business; but had never seen the defendant's mill, or been in Delavan, and knew nothing from personal observation or knowledge of the extent of the custom work of the mill, its business, or product, or of the water power.

He was then asked to state the rental value of the mill in question, in his judgment, during the period in question. The question was objected to, "because the witness had never seen and had no personal knowledge of the property in question, and was therefore incompetent to testify as to rental value." The court sustained the objection, and the plaintiff excepted to the ruling.

The witness was then asked to state such rental value, "upon the supposition that the said mill had a good water power and all the business it could attend to, as claimed by the defendant, and a capacity of manufacturing seventy-five barrels per day." To this question the same objection was made, and sustained by the court, and the plaintiff excepted as before.

The defendant then introduced evidence tending to show that the machinery and work furnished by the plaintiff did not comply with the contract, and did not and could not operate satisfactorily; and that his flouring mill, with the machinery constructed and placed therein by the plaintiff, did not and would not do as good work as other roller mills of like capacity; and that it was necessary, in order to put it in condition to do such work, to expend the sum of $2,772, including $1,100 for the cost of new machinery; and that the defendant did this after his attorneys had served upon the plaintiff's attorney, and the plaintiff had neglected to comply with, a notice in these words: "If your clients do not within ten days proceed to put the mill in repair so that it will do good work, Mr. Phelps will employ the best millwrights he can obtain and put the mill in order, and charge the expense to your clients."

The court, at the plaintiff's request, gave to the jury the following instructions: "The plaintiff was entitled to a fair test of the machinery put into the defendant's mill, and nothing short of that would justify its condemnation. Such a test requires an ample power to operate the machinery to the best advantage; and this means the whole of the machinery, if the jury find that the machinery was designed and intended to be operated together. It also contemplates competent management by a miller who thoroughly understood such machinery and was able to manipulate and handle it so as to secure the best results of which it was capable."

The court also instructed the jury as follows: "If the plaintiff broke this contract by failing to furnish the defendant such a mill as it was bound to furnish, then the defendant had the right to give the plaintiff notice that it was required to remedy the defects, and on its failure to do so the defendant could then proceed and correct the defects himself, so that the mill should be such as he was entitled to have under the contract, and charge the reasonable and necessary expenses of the work to the plaintiff. The limit to which the defendant could go in that direction is this: He would have the right to make the mill completely answer the demands of the contract and nothing more, that is, a first class complete roller mill of the designated capacity, capable of doing as good work as other first class roller mills of similar grade and capacity would do on the same kind of stock. He would only have the right to incur and make the plaintiff chargeable with such expenses as were reasonable and necessary to put the mill in that condition. If the system put into the defendant's mill could have been perfected by alterations in matters of detail so as to make it first class, complete, capable of doing the work contemplated by the contract, then the additional work on the mill should have been limited to such alterations; but if it could not be thus perfected without more radical changes and additions, then the defendant had the right to proceed so far as actual necessity required, making the expense of the work as moderate and reasonable as the circumstances permitted."

The plaintiff excepted to this portion of the instructions, for the reason that "The same authorizes the jury to allow the defendant, and to deduct from the claim of the plaintiff, as a part of the expense of changing the mill over so as to make it conform to the contract, the cost of the new machinery put into the mill, amounting to $1,100."

The jury returned a verdict by which "They find the issue herein in favor of the defendant, but that the defendant is not entitled to recover damages against the plaintiff in excess of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant." Judgment was rendered on the verdict, and the plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

Mr. Gerry W. Hazelton, for plaintiff in error:

Where the thing furnished is to be satisfactory to the purchasing party and he neglects to return or to offer to return it, but takes it into possession and uses it either in the shape in which it is, or for the purpose of making it over into something different, he thereby obligates himself to pay for it at the contract price, and is not at liberty to recoup the cost of such reconstruction in an action for the price.

Mr. John T. Fish for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal position taken in the argument for the plaintiff is that the defendant, having received and retained the machinery furnished under the contract sued on, was bound to pay the contract price; and, in support of this position, cases were cited holding that, under a contract to manufacture or to furnish a chattel satisfactory to the purchaser, the purchaser, if he takes possession of and uses it, thereby conclusively accepts it as satisfactory and binds himself to pay the whole contract price.

Considering the instructions given at the plaintiff's own request and the grounds on which the plaintiff excepted to the other instructions of the court, it is, to say the least, doubtful whether this point is open. But, assuming it to be open, it clearly cannot be sustained, and the cases cited are inapplicable.

The plaintiff's agreement was not for a sale of the machinery, subject to a condition that it should be satisfactory to the purchaser. But it was an agreement, not only to furnish machinery of a certain description and quality, but also to set it up and put it in complete operation in the defendant's mill. The machinery was to be erected on the defendant's land and made part of his mill; and one installment of the price was to be paid on the delivery of the machinery there, and before the plaintiff had completed the work to the satisfaction of the defendant. In such a case it would be most unreasonable to compel the defendant, in order to entitle him to avoid paying the whole contract price or to recover damages for the plaintiff's breach of contract, to undergo the expense of taking out the machinery and the prolonged interruption of his business during the time requisite to obtain new machinery elsewhere. The rule of damages adopted by the court below, of deducting from the contract price the reasonable cost of altering the construction and setting of the machinery so as to make it conform to the contract, is the only one that would do full and exact justice to both parties and is in accordance with the decisions upon similar contracts. Benjamin v. Hillard, 64 U. S. 23 How. 149 [16: 518]; Florida R. Co. v. Smith, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 255 [22: 513]; Marsh v. McPherson, 105 U. S. 709, 717 [26: 1139, 1142]; Cutler v. Close, 5 Car. & P. 337; Thornton v. Place, 1 Mood. & Rob. 218; Allen v. Cameron, 3 Tyrwh. 907; S. C. 1 Cromp. & M. 832.

The notice given by the defendant to the plaintiff "to put the mill in repair so as to do good work" was sufficient to cover all alterations necessary to accomplish that end.

No error is shown in the exclusion of Geissner's testimony as to the rental value of a mill which he had never seen and knew nothing of. Whether a witness called to testify to any matter of opinion has such qualifications and knowledge as to make his testimony admissible is a preliminary question for the judge presiding at the trial; and his decision of it is conclusive, unless clearly shown to be erroneous in matter of law. Perkins v. Stickney, 132 Mass. 217, and cases cited; Sorg v. First German Congregation, 63 Pa. 156.

Decision on the facts—open defects, known to party, not the subject of misrepresentation.

1. The findings of fact in this case negative the positions, relied upon by plaintiffs in error, that defendant willfully misled plaintiffs and induced them to sell a silver mine for a price less than its value, and that defendant agreed to pay plaintiffs' agent money to conceal from them the existence of a valuable body of ore, and procured a conveyance from plaintiffs of the mine in fraud of their rights.

2. Purely surface indications, open to all ordinary observers and situated on the path which plaintiffs traveled in going to and from their work and which must have been known to them, are not the subject of concealment and misrepresentation.

Submitted Jan. 25, 1889. Decided April 22, 1889.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Idaho, in favor of defendant in an action to annul the sale of a silver mine and to compel him to reconvey the same. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. G. Sutherland and John R. McBride for appellants.

No counsel appeared for appellee.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 24th of May, 1882, John Synnott and Peter Welch commenced an action in one of the territorial courts of Idaho Territory against Michael Shaughnessy, to have annulled the sale of the Eureka Silver Mine, situated in Mineral Hill mining district, Alturas County, in that Territory, and to compel him to reconvey the same to them as vendors. In their complaint the plaintiffs alleged that on the 5th day of July, 1881, they were the owners each of an undivided one half, and in the lawful possession, of the Eureka silver-mining claim, particularly describing it by metes and bounds, which they had located in June, 1880, and upon which they had developed a small seam or vein of galena ore, worth about $1,000; that this vein was all of the ore which had been discovered by them or either of them, upon the mining claim, up to that time, and that they were ignorant of the existence of any other vein or body of ore, and believed that all the value that was then attached to the mining claim arose from the developments they had made upon the claim and the ore they had discovered, and did not exceed $2,500; that on or about the 3d of July, 1881, the defendant, by his agents and employés, had discovered upon a part of the Eureka mining claim, remote from the places where the plaintiffs had been at work, a large and valuable vein, or body of ore, from eighteen inches to four feet in thickness, extending about seventy feet continuously along said vein, the existence of which rendered the mine worth at least $100,000, and of the existence of which these plaintiffs were wholly ignorant; that the defendant, by his agents and servants, intending to cheat and defraud these plaintiffs, fraudulently and falsely concealed and suppressed from them the knowledge of the existence of such vein or ore body, and misrepresented the facts concerning the same, and fraudulently and falsely represented to them that no other ore body or vein of ore existed in the mining claim, except such as was known to these plaintiffs; that such false and fraudulent statements were made by the defendant, his agent and employés, in order to enable him to purchase the mining claim at a price far below its real value; that by means of such false and fraudulent concealment and misrepresentations these plaintiffs, who believed the same to be true, were made to believe that no other body or vein of ore existed in the mining claim than that which was known to them, and that the real value of the claim was not more than $2,200; that immediately prior to the discovery of the ore vein or ore body by the defendant, these plaintiffs had employed one Henry Porter as an agent to find for them a purchaser of their claim at the sum of $2,500, and agreed to pay him ten per cent of that sum if he should make a sale thereof at the price mentioned; that during such employment of Porter, and while he was endeavoring to obtain a purchaser for the mine, he, himself, first made the discovery of the aforesaid ore vein and ore body, which was unknown to these plaintiffs; that upon such discovery Porter concealed the same from the plaintiffs, and falsely and collusively and for a consideration paid to him by the defendant, to wit, $1,000, informed the defendant of the existence of such large vein or ore body, and then and there, in violation of his employment by these plaintiffs, and in fraud of their rights, entered into the employment of the defendant, and undertook and agreed to assist him in concealing from them the knowledge of the existence of the ore body he had discovered, and in obtaining the mining claim from them at the price of $2,200, which was greatly below its real value; that by reason of those false, fraudulent and collusive acts of Porter, as well as the misrepresentations and concealments of the defendant, these plaintiffs were induced to part with their property for the sum of $2,200, and to execute and deliver to the defendant a quit-claim deed of the Eureka mining claim, dated on the 5th day of July, 1881, which was afterwards duly recorded; that by reason of such conveyance thus fraudulently obtained from them, and if the same be not declared fraudulent, null and void, they will sustain great pecuniary loss and damage, to wit, $100,000; that since the conveyance to the defendant of the mining claim he has been in the possession of the same, and has extracted and taken therefrom a large quantity of ore and has made large profits therefrom, to wit, over $3,000; and that the plaintiffs are ready and willing and hereby offer to repay to the defendant the sum of $2,200, the purchase price of the mining claim, together with interest from July 5, 1881, upon a reconveyance of the mining property to them.

The prayer for relief was: (1) That the deed of July 5, 1881, be declared fraudulent, null and void, and set aside by the court, and the defendant be decreed to reconvey the mining claim and premises to the plaintiffs upon their paying him the purchase price thereof, together with lawful interest from the date of the purchase; (2) That the defendant be decreed to account to the plaintiffs for the net proceeds of the ore extracted by him from the mining claim since his purchase thereof, and upon such accounting be decreed to pay the same to the plaintiffs; (3) That the defendant, his agents and employés, be enjoined and restrained from interfering with the mining claim, or extracting or clearing away any of the ore therefrom; (4) That the plaintiffs be put in possession of the mining claim by the process of the court; (5) That the defendant be decreed to pay the costs of this action; and (6) For other and further relief.

The answer of the defendant denied specifically all the material allegations of the complaint, and set out in detail the circumstances attending the purchase of the mine, which, if proved, would establish his good faith in such purchase, and the absence of any fraudulent acts on the part of himself or any of his agents connected with such transactions.

The cause having been heard upon the pleadings and proofs, the court found the facts in favor of the defendant, and entered a decree in his favor. Upon appeal to the supreme court of the Territory, that decree was in all respects affirmed; and an appeal from the latter decree brings the case here.

The findings of fact by the trial court, and which were adopted by the supreme court of the Territory, are twenty in number, and elaborately set out all the facts and circumstances attending the sale of the mine. The material facts, as gathered from these findings, stated briefly, are as follows:

For some time prior to the 5th of July, 1881, the plaintiffs, Synnott and Welch, had owned the Eureka mine, and had lived in a cabin near by. They had done considerable work in developing it, and had found a small vein of ore, from which they had extracted, through several tunnels, about $1,000 worth of ore, then lying on the premises. They were desirous of selling the claim, and entered into an agreement with one Porter, to pay him a commission of ten per cent on the sale thereof, in case he realized from such sale $2,500.

Under these arrangements Porter first applied to one John Gilman to purchase the claim, but no agreement was reached between them. Porter then, on the morning of July 5, 1881, tried to induce one E. A. Wall (who afterwards acted as the agent of the defendant Shaughnessy) to purchase the claim. He informed Wall that he had a verbal option of purchase at the price of $2,000, and that his terms would be a commission of $500, or one fourth of the claim, if Wall should purchase it. In the same interview he stated to Wall that he thought he could show him something on the claim that would induce him to buy it. Porter then having disclosed to Wall that he had a further appointment with Gilman to resume negotiations regarding the claim, Wall declined to have any further conference, or to make any terms for the purchase, so long as negotiations with Gilman continued.

Porter then met Gilman, and they inspected the claim together. Porter showed him float ore which he had discovered at two places on the claim, one of which was on and about the path which Synnott and Welch had usually traveled from their cabin to their work on the claim, and the other at a point about fifty yards from that path. After this inspection Gilman went immediately to Synnott and Welch, and had further negotiations with them, but they failed to agree on any terms. Synnott and Welch then informed Porter that they were willing to sell the claim for $2,000, but in that case could not allow him any commission.

On the evening of that day Porter again went to Wall, and resumed negotiations. They went together over the Eureka claim, and Porter showed Wall the float ore he had found, and insisted on having one fourth of the claim for his option and for showing the float ore. Wall informed him that if he bought the claim it would be for the defendant Shaughnessy, who might prefer to be the sole owner, and proposed that if Porter would allow him ten days to decide he would either allow him one fourth of the claim or pay him $1,000, to which Porter agreed, and at the end of that period, and after the purchase, the $1,000 was paid to Porter accordingly. After their examination of the claim Wall went with Porter to the cabin of Synnott and Welch and informed them that he would buy the claim for $2,000, to which they assented. Wall then told them to come down to his office at Bullion and make out their deed, and they agreed to do so. After Wall and Porter had left, Gilman returned and resumed negotiations with Synnott and Welch, finally offering them $1,800 and one tenth of the proceeds of the claim, or $2,200 in money for the whole. He also informed them of the fact that Porter had discovered float ore on the place. After Gilman had gone away, Porter returned to the cabin of Synnott and Welch, and the three went together to Wall's office. On the way they informed Porter of the offer made by Gilman, and intimated that they would expect the same from Wall, because they were poor, and could not afford to lose the $200, or pay any commission. On their arrival at Wall's office, Porter informed Wall of Gilman's offer, whereupon Wall told them that he would pay $2,200 for the claim, adding, with some asperity, that Gilman should not have it at any price. The deed from Synnott and Welch to Shaughnessy for $2,200 was then drawn and executed and attested, and was acknowledged the following day.

The day after the sale Porter did some work on the claim at one of the points where he had found float ore, and on the following day Wall, as agent of the defendant, put miners at work at one of the places where float ore had been observed, and in the course of a few days, by an open cut 20 by 25 feet, discovered a body of ore in place, which, when taken out weighed 23 tons and netted the defendant about $800.

The ore exposed by Synnott and Welch was taken out and sold by the defendant, netting him about $90.

The defendant afterwards expended about $23,000 in developing the claim, and discovered a large and valuable lode. He has sold ore from it to the amount of about $3,000. At the time this suit was brought he had opened negotiations for the sale of the claim at $150,000.

The plaintiffs in error rest their case upon two propositions, viz.: (1) The defendant, with knowledge of the existence of a large "body of ore" in this claim, by his agent, who made the purchase, willfully misled the plaintiffs in relation thereto, and induced them to sell for a price which they would not have sold for had they been truly informed of the facts. (2) The defendant, by his agent (Wall), entered into an agreement to pay the agent of the plaintiffs (Porter) a sum of money to conceal from his principals his knowledge of the existence of a valuable body of ore, which he had informed the defendant's agent of, and then procured a conveyance from the plaintiffs of the claim, in fraud of their rights.

These two propositions, in our opinion, are clearly negatived by the 12th, 14th and 15th findings of fact, which are as follows:

"12. The evidence in the case does not show or tend to show that Wall or Porter or any other person had discovered or knew of the existence of any vein or lode of ore in place on the Eureka mining claim, other than such as had been found by and was known to Synnott and Welch, in their excavations, at any time prior to the sale and execution of the deed."

"14. No false or fraudulent representations concerning the Eureka mining claim were ever made to said vendors or anyone else by the defendant, or by any agent or employé of his.

"15. No concealment of any material fact concerning said mining claim was ever made by the defendant or by any agent or employé of his. Neither the defendant nor any agent of his had ever discovered or knew of the existence of any vein or lode on said claim (except such as Synnott and Welch had exposed by their tunnels) prior to the sale, nor until some days had elapsed after the sale."

In the assignment of errors, however, it is insisted that these findings are not responsive to the allegations of the complaint. It is said that the trial court did not make any findings on the following material issues: (1) It did not find as to the value of the ore body discovered in the Eureka mining claim by Porter, and by him shown to Wall at the time the purchase was made by the latter for the defendant; (2) It did not find as to the knowledge of the existence and extent of such ore body by Wall, at the date last mentioned; (3) It failed to find whether Porter discovered any ore body, as alleged, and, if so when, and what was its value and extent; what concealments were practiced by him upon the plaintiffs, if any; what knowledge defendant or his agent had of these concealments; whether plaintiffs were offered or received the value of the claim at the time of the sale thereof; what the defendant paid Porter the $1,000 for; what the contract was between Porter and Wall; and what were Porter's relations to the vendors at the time of the sale.

We do not think there is much force in this contention. It will be observed that the basis of this assignment of error is the assumption that Porter, as the agent of the plaintiffs, prior to the day the mine was sold, had discovered a valuable body of ore, the knowledge of which he concealed from the plaintiffs, and imparted to the defendant.

This assumption, as shown by the findings, to which we are restricted, is entirely without foundation. Neither Porter nor the defendant or his agent, Wall, ever discovered any vein or lode of ore on the claim at any time prior to the sale thereof by the plaintiffs. The counsel for appellants contend that the court, in finding that Porter or Wall discovered no "vein" or "lode," did not find that they discovered no "ore body." We deem it sufficient to say that the context of the complaint shows that those terms were used synonymously by the pleader, in the common parlance of miners, and not with reference to any technical distinction. The only indications of any such ore body or vein that had been found were simply a few small pieces of ore known as "float" ore, which did not of necessity indicate the existence of any large ore body. Further, the fact that Porter had found "float" ore on the claim was made known to the plaintiffs before they made the deed for the claim. Such purely surface indications, open to all ordinary observers, and situated on or near the path along which the plaintiffs traveled in going to and from their work, must have been known to them, and are not such as to be made the subject of concealment and misrepresentation. The fact, however, that there was no such discovery of an actual vein or body of ore demonstrates that there could have been no such fraudulent and collusive concealment and misrepresentation, as to its limit and extent, as is charged in this complaint. It required not only a considerable excavation, but also a great outlay of money and great labor on the part of the defendant to develop the existence of a vein of ore.

This virtually disposes of both propositions advanced by the plaintiffs in support of their contention. That the defendant paid Porter $1,000, there is no question. But that such sum was paid to him to conceal from the plaintiffs his knowledge of the existence of a large ore body on the claim could not have been true; for the findings state that he possessed no such knowledge. It is presumable that the plaintiffs, as men of ordinary intelligence, must have known that Porter was to receive from the defendant, or his agent, Wall, a commission for his work in the transactions connected with the sale of the mine; for the findings show that they did not pay him anything out of the sum received from such sale, as their agent, and informed him beforehand that while they were willing to sell the claim for $2,000, in that case they could not allow him any commission. It really could make no difference to the plaintiffs what he was paid, since they received for the claim all they had asked for it, and in reality $200 more than they had, a few hours before, agreed to take, and within $50 of what they would have got if Porter had made the sale under their first agreement with him.

There are no other features of the case that call for special mention. In no aspect of it do we think either the law or the equities are with the plaintiffs.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Idaho is, therefore, affirmed.

THOMAS W. CORNELL.

Cancellation of negotiable instrument—effect of erasing cancellation and reissuing — certificates of indebtedness of District of Columbia.

1. When the maker of a negotiable instrument lawfully cancels it before maturity, his liability upon it is extinguished, and cannot be revived without his consent.
2. It is immaterial whether the cancellation is by destroying the instrument, or by writing or stamping words or lines in ink upon its face, provided the instrument, in the condition in which he puts it, unequivocally shows that it has been canceled.
3. Where certificates of indebtedness of the District of Columbia, called sewer certificates, were redeemed and canceled by the proper officers by stamping across their face marks of cancellation as clear and permanent as the original signatures, the liability of the District upon them cannot be revived by its omission to take additional precaution against their being stolen and fraudulently restored to their original condition by effacing the marks of cancellation.
4. Such certificates were in no sense money or the equivalent of money and had no validity unless issued for a purpose authorized by law, and had not the character of commercial paper so as to render them, when fraudulently issued, valid in the hands of bona fide holders.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Claims against the District of Columbia, on stolen certificates of indebtedness which had been redeemed and canceled and the marks of cancellation erased. Reversed.

Reported below, 20 Ct. Cl. 229.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Claims against the District of Columbia for $7,750 and interest on certificates of indebtedness, commonly called sewer certificates, issued by the Board of Public Works of the District in the following form, with coupons attached:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

No. 1380.

Washington, July 1st, 1873.

This certifies that for work done under direction of the Board of Public Works, and chargeable to the private property adjoining and benefited thereby, there is due to the bearer Five Hundred Dollars, payable July 1st, 1876, with eight per centum interest, payable semi-annually, as per coupons attached. Issued in accordance with Act of Legislative Assembly; secured by pledge to the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of assessments made in accordance with Act approved June 26, 1873, against private property benefited by improvements, and receivable in payment of such assessments.

Board of Public Works,
By James A. Magrude
Treasurer.

Countersigned:
Horace J. Frost,
For Commissioners of Sinking Fund.

Registered:
George E. Baker,
Comptroller.

Last six months' interest payable with certificate.

The material facts, as found by the Court of Claims, were as follows:

On July 1, 1873, such certificates to the amount of about $2,000,000 were issued by the Board of Public Works, under an Act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, approved June 26, 1873, and were paid out to contractors, jobbers and laborers, and soon became greatly depreciated in value, and were bought and sold by brokers and speculators.

After the creation of the board of audit by the Act of Congress of June 20, 1874, chap. 337, § 6, most of these certificates, including those in question, were presented to that board and redeemed as provided in that Act. 18 Stat. at L. 119.

The certificates so redeemed were canceled by stamping across the face in ink, with a ribbon stamp, the words "Canceled by the Board of Audit." They were then inclosed in jackets, tied up in bundles of fifty in numerical order, and placed on a shelf under the counter in a room in the Treasury Department, occupied by several clerks employed by the board. The fact of redemption was entered in a registry book.

After the redemption and cancellation of the certificates, and while they were in the custody of the board of audit, as above stated, they were stolen, in February or March, 1876, by one George H. Farnham, who was then a clerk in the employ of the board, and occupying a desk behind the counter under which the certificates were deposited, but whose duties were not connected with the redemption or care of the certificates.

By the use of detersive soap Farnham entirely removed from a large portion of the certificates the marks of cancellation. From other certificates, on which some ink marks still appeared, he cut off the coupons and pasted them over the partially effaced marks. In this condition no signs or marks of cancellation or redemption were visible on the certificates, but some of them still had a soiled or stained appearance.

The stolen certificates were sold by Farnham to brokers in Washington, and by them to one Ritchie, and by him to the claimant; and all the purchasers bought them for value, in good faith, and without notice that they had been redeemed or canceled; and the certificates were then in the same condition, in respect of their appearance as to indicating signs or evidences of cancellation or redemption, as they were at the time they were first negotiated by Farnham, and as they are now.

The judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the claimant was for the amount of such certificates as were shown to have been so purchased by him before their maturity. 20 Ct. Cl. 229.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

When the maker of a negotiable instrument lawfully cancels it before maturity, his liability upon it is extinguished, and cannot be revived without his consent. It is immaterial whether the cancellation is by destroying the instrument, or by writing or stamping words or lines in ink upon its face, provided the instrument, in the condition in which he puts it, unequivocally shows that it has been canceled. Scholey v. Ramsbottom, 2 Camp. 485; Burbridge v. Manners, 3 Camp. 193; Ingham v. Primrose, 7 C. B. N. S. 82, 86; Yglesias v. Mercantile Bank, L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 60.

In Burbridge v. Manners, Lord Ellenborough said: "It is the duty of bankers to make some memorandum on bills and notes which have been paid,"—clearly indicating his opinion that the making of such a memorandum upon the securities would be sufficient to protect the bankers from being afterwards held liable to any holder thereof.

The decision in Ingham v. Primrose, holding the acceptor of a bill of exchange, who had torn it in halves and thrown the pieces into the street, liable to one who afterwards took it, in good faith and for value, from one who had picked it up and pasted the pieces together, proceeded upon the ground that the tearing of the bill into two pieces, as manifest on its face, "was at least as consistent with its having been divided into two for the purpose of safer transmission by the post, as with its having been torn for the purpose of annulling it." And the decision can be maintained, if at all, on that ground only. Baxendale v. Bennett, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 525, 532.

In Baxendale v. Bennett, one who had given his blank acceptance on stamped paper to another and authorized him to fill in his own name as drawer, and received it back from him unfilled, and put it in the unlocked drawer of his desk, from which it was afterwards stolen, and filled up, without his authority, by inserting the name of another person as drawer, was held not liable to an indorsee for value.

In State v. Wells, Fargo & Co. 15 Cal. 336, cited by the claimant, treasury warrants of the State of California had been once lawfully issued, presented and paid, but never canceled in any way before they were stolen and again put in circulation; and the suit was not upon the warrants, but was brought by the State against bona fide holders who had presented them a second time, and to recover back the value of bonds which the State had delivered to them in exchange for the warrants, and which they, in good faith, had since parted with.

Much reliance was placed by the claimant upon the case of Cooke v. United States, 91 U. S. 389 [23: 237], in which the United States were held by a majority of this court to be liable to a bona fide holder of interest bearing treasury notes, printed by the Treasury Department from genuine plates, and perfect in form, complete and ready for issue, and never issued by any authorized officer, but fraudulently or surreptitiously put in circulation. In the opinion, much stress was laid upon the considerations that the notes, were perfect and complete as soon as printed, and did not require the signature of any officer, but, as soon as they had received the impression of all the plates and dies necessary to perfect their form, were ready for circulation and use; that in this respect they did not differ from coins of the mint when fully stamped and prepared for issue; and that these notes were intended to circulate and take the place of money, to some extent, for commercial purposes; were made a legal tender for their face value, exclusive of interest, as between the Government and its creditors, and passed readily from hand to hand as, or in lieu of, money. 91 U. S. 404 [23: 245].

We are not prepared to extend the scope of that decision, and the facts of this case, as found by the Court of Claims, are quite different.

The certificates in suit, after they had been redeemed according to law, were canceled by the proper officers, by distinctly stamping in ink across the face words stating that fact, and in that condition were made up in bundles and put away on a shelf, whence they were afterwards stolen by a clerk, who had no duty or authority connected with their redemption or care, and who afterwards fraudulently effaced the marks of cancellation, by the use of detersive soap, and by pasting coupons over them, and then put the certificates in circulation.

The provision of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1875, chap. 162, § 16, by which certain officers of the District of Columbia are required to destroy by burning all redeemed certificates, is in terms and effect merely directory, and does not make the District liable on such certificates fraudulently put in circulation, after they have been otherwise unmistakably canceled. 18 Stat. at L. 505.

These certificates having been lawfully extinguished by stamping across their face marks of cancellation as clear and permanent as the original signatures, the liability of the District upon them as negotiable paper could not be revived by its omission to take additional precautions against their being stolen and fraudulently restored to their original condition by such means as ingenious wickedness might devise.

Moreover, these certificates were in no sense money or the equivalent of money. Though negotiable instruments, they belonged to a peculiar class of such instruments, being made by a municipal corporation, and having no validity unless issued for a purpose authorized by law, and as to which this court has repeatedly laid down and acted on the following rule: "Vouchers for money due, certificates of indebtedness for services rendered, or for property furnished for the use of the city, orders or drafts drawn by one city officer upon another, or any other device of the kind, used for liquidating the amounts legitimately due to public creditors, are of course necessary instruments for carrying on the machinery of municipal administration, and for anticipating the collection of taxes. But to invest such documents with the character and incidents of commercial paper, so as to render them in the hands of bona fide holders absolute obligations to pay, however irregularly or fraudulently issued, is an abuse of their true character and purpose." Nashville v. Ray, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 468, 477 [22: 164, 169]; Wall v. Monroe County, 103 U. S. 74, 78 [26: 430, 432]; Claiborne County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400, 408 [28: 470, 473].

Considering the nature of these certificates, the method in which they had been canceled, and the means by which they were afterwards put in circulation, we are of opinion that there is no ground for holding the District of Columbia liable to this claimant.

Judgment reversed.

THE UNION TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Appt., v. THE SOUTHERN INLAND NAVIGATION AND IMPROVEMENT COMPANY ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 565–572.)

Deed, made in violation of injunction—lis pendens—effect of on purchase—collateral proceeding—improvement fund of Florida.

1. A deed, made in violation of an injunction, previously issued and served, is subject to the decree subsequently rendered, in the suit in which the injunction was granted.
2. All persons dealing with property are bound to take notice of a suit pending with regard to the title thereto, and will, on their peril, purchase the same from any of the parties to the suit.
3. A lis pendens, duly prosecuted, and not collusive, is notice to a purchaser so as to affect and bind his interest by the decree; and the lis pendens begins from the service of the subpena after the bill is filed.
4. A decree, although erroneous but not void, cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding.
5. The trustees of the internal improvement fund of the State of Florida are merely agents for the State, invested with the legal title of the lands for their more convenient administration; and the State remains the beneficial proprietor, subject to the guaranties which have been made to the holders of railroad bonds secured thereby.

Argued March 11, 12, 1889. Decided April 22, 1889.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, dismissing a suit to adjudge that the trustees of the internal improvement fund of the State of Florida have no right in the land embraced in a mortgage, and that said lands are subject to said mortgage, and that the property so mortgaged be sold to pay bonds secured by the mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William Fullerton and J. C. Cooper for appellant.

Mr. Wayne MacVeagh for appellees.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit arises out of certain transactions connected with the execution of the Act of the General Assembly of Florida, approved January 6, 1855, providing for and encouraging a liberal system of internal improvements in that State. Laws of Florida, 1855, chap. 610. By that Act, so much of the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to Florida by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1845, as remained unsold; the proceeds of the sale of such as were on hand and unappropriated; all proceeds thereafter accruing from similar sales; and all the swamp lands or lands subject to overflow, granted to Florida by the Act of Congress approved September 28, 1850, with all the proceeds accrued and to accrue from their sale, were set apart and declared a distinct and separate fund, to be called "The Internal Improvement Fund of the State of Florida." The general object and scope of the Act are stated in Florida v. Anderson, 91 U. S. 667, 670, 676 [23: 290, 294, 297], where it was said that these lands and their proceeds "were vested in the Governor, the comptroller, treasurer, attorney-general, and register of state lands, and their successors in office, in trust to dispose of the same and invest their proceeds, with power to pledge the fund for the payment of the interest on the bonds (to the extent of $10,000 per mile) which might be issued by any railroad companies constructing roads on certain lines indicated by the Act. The companies, after completing their roads, were to pay, besides interest on their bonds, one per cent per annum on the amount thereof, to form a sinking fund for the ultimate payment of the principal. The Act declared that the bonds should constitute a first lien or mortgage on the roads, their equipment and franchises; and upon a failure on the part of any railroad company accepting the Act to provide the interest and the payments to the sinking fund as required thereby, it was made the duty of the trustees to take possession of the railroad and all its property, and advertise the same for sale at public auction." In the same case it was said that the trustees are merely agents of the State, invested with the legal title of the lands for their more convenient administration; and that the State remains in every respect the beneficial proprietor, subject to the guaranties which have been made to the holders of railroad bonds secured thereby. See also Florida Cent. R. Co. v. Schutte, 103 U. S. 118 [26: 327]; Littlefield v. Improvement Fund Trustees, 117 U. S. 419 [29: 930]; Vose v. Reed, 1 Woods, 647; Vose v. Trustees of Improvement Fund, 2 Woods, 647.

On the third of November, 1870, Francis Vose brought a suit in equity in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Florida, against said trustees and others. Among the defendants were the Florida Canal and Inland Transportation Company, the Southern Inland Navigation Company (described in some parts of the bill and in some of the interrogatories annexed as the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company), the New York and Florida Lumber, Land and Improvement Company, and M. S. Mickles, agent of the last named company. The object of that suit was to obtain an injunction and decree protecting the Internal Improvement Fund against waste and misappropriation by the trustees, to the injury of Vose and others, who held unpaid bonds issued by the Florida Railroad Company in conformity with the Act of 1855. The bill charged that the trustees had violated the law of their trust by misappropriating money received by them, leaving unpaid past-due coupons, by neglecting to collect the amount due the sinking fund created by the Act of 1855, and by illegally conveying millions of acres of land to corporations that had no right to receive them, and that unless restrained they would continue to waste and misapply, to the irreparable injury of the plaintiff, Vose, and others, the fund intrusted to them for the use and purposes indicated in the Act. Among other allegations in the bill was one to the effect that "on the 28th day of July, 1868, the said trustees, by resolution of that date, attempted to secure to the said Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company forty thousand acres, or thereabouts, of the said trust lands, and that about the first of March, 1870, they entered into an agreement with the said New York and Florida Lumber, Land and Improvement Company, by which they undertook to convey one million one hundred thousand acres of the same for the nominal price of 10 cents an acre, and that this vast domain was and is to be selected from the most valuable of the said trust lands."

On the 6th of December, 1870, the circuit court issued an injunction to the trustees and their successors, commanding them, among other things, to desist "from selling or donating or disposing of the land belonging to said trust, otherwise than in strict accordance with the provisions of said Act of 1855," and "from selling said lands for scrip or state warrants of any kind, or for aught other than current money of the United States." This injunction was duly served upon the trustees within a few days after it was issued.

On the 6th of February, 1871, an order was made reciting the service of subpena in chancery upon the "defendants" in conformity with the rules and practice of the court, and the bill was taken for confessed (except as to the defendant Walker) for want of an answer, plea or demurrer. The Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund subsequently appeared and were permitted to file their answer, controverting the principal allegations of the bill. On the 10th of February, 1871, four days after the bill had been taken for confessed, a majority of the trustees, "for and in the consideration of the sum of one dollar to them in hand paid," conveyed to the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company one million three hundred and sixty thousand six hundred acres of land; and, shortly thereafter, March 20, 1871, the latter company mortgaged the above and other lands obtained from the trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund, to secure the payment of bonds for a very large amount which the mortgagor company proposed to issue.

By a decree, rendered December 4, 1873, in the suit brought by Vose, it was among other things adjudged that "The contracts or agreements, entered into by the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund, with the corporation known as the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company, be rescinded, and the same are hereby declared to be null and void; and the lands undertaken to be conveyed or contracted to be conveyed shall be restored to the said internal improvement fund, and be subjected to sale by the agents appointed by decree of this court, rendered during the term in accordance with the provisions of said decree."

Subsequently, in May, 1875, the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement company filed its petition in the Vose suit, praying that the decree of December 4, 1873, be vacated, and it be permitted to file such pleadings as were necessary for the defense of its interests. The grounds upon which this relief was asked were that the company had not been made a party to the suit nor served with a subpena. These grounds were controverted in an answer filed by Vose to the petition. The questions thus raised were heard by Mr. Justice Bradley, March 26, 1877, who found that the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company was duly made a party to the bill filed by Vose, was served with process of subpena thereon, and failed and neglected to appear and answer the bill. Its prayer to vacate the order or decree of December 4, 1873, and permit it to file necessary pleadings in that suit was denied.

The present suit was instituted April 12, 1883, by the Union Trust Company of New York, against the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company and the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund. Its object is to obtain a decree adjudging that the said trustees have no right, title or interest in the lands embraced in the mortgage of February 10, 1871; that the same are subject to said mortgage; and that the property so mortgaged be sold to pay the amount found to be due upon any outstanding bonds secured by that mortgage. The principal defense rests upon the above proceedings, orders and decrees in the Vose suit. The bill was dismissed with costs, and from the decree of dismissal the present appeal was prosecuted.

The argument at the bar covered several questions of an interesting character, which we do not deem it necessary to determine, as the decree below must be affirmed upon the ground that the deed of February 10, 1871, by the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund to the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company—under which deed the present plaintiff, as mortgagee of the grantee, claims title—was made in violation of the injunction previously issued and served upon said trustees in the suit instituted by Vose. That suit, as we have seen, had for its object the protection of the rights of Vose and other holders of railroad bonds in the lands and money under the control of the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund. The injunction bound the trustees, and they and all other parties to the suit, who were before the court, were concluded by the decree subsequently rendered in respect to the disposition of the lands that were the subject matter of the litigation. In County of Warren v. Marcy, 97 U. S. 96, 105 [24: 977, 980], it was said to be a general rule that "All persons dealing with property are bound to take notice of a suit pending with regard to the title thereto, and will, on their peril, purchase the same from any of the parties to the suit." While this rule was said not to apply to negotiable securities, purchased before maturity, nor to articles of ordinary commerce sold in the usual way, it was held to be applicable in cases relating to land. And in support of this view was cited the case of Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. 566, in which Chancellor Kent laid it down as an established rule that "A lis pendens, duly prosecuted, and not collusive, is notice to a purchaser so as to affect and bind his interest by the decree; and the lis pendens begins from the service of the subpena after the bill is filed." Here the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company accepted a conveyance of the lands in question from the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund, after service of the subpena, and a copy of the injunction, upon the trustees, its grantors. That company, therefore, took its titles pendente lite, and its mortgagee, the Union Trust Company, was bound by the final decree rendered in the case to the same extent that it is bound.

It is, however, suggested that the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company was not a party to the Vose suit, and consequently was not bound by that part of the decree of December 4, 1878, adjudging that the contracts or agreements entered into by the trustees with that company "be rescinded, and the same are declared null and void, and the lands undertaken to be conveyed, or contracted to be conveyed, shall be restored to the said Internal Improvement Fund, and be subjected to sale by the agents appointed by the court." To this suggestion there are two answers: First. The question whether the Southern Navigation and Improvement Company was a party defendant to the Vose suit, and therefore affected by the decree pro confesso, passed February 6, 1871, was determined adversely to it by the order of March 26, 1877, denying its application to have the order of December 4, 1873, set aside. From the order of March 26, 1877, no appeal was prosecuted; and in this collateral proceeding that order is to be taken as conclusively establishing the fact that the Southern Inland Navigation Company was a party to the Vose suit, was served with process of subpena therein, and neglected to appear and answer the bill. Second. The relief granted in the Vose suit in respect to the agreement or contracts which the Southern Inland Navigation and Improvement Company claimed to have with the Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund was within the general scope of that suit, and was fairly covered by the prayer for such relief as might be deemed just and equitable. Besides, if that company was a party to the Vose suit, and we have seen that it was, the decree, so far as it rescinds the agreement or contracts it had with the trustees, and restores to the Internal Improvement Fund the lands covered by these contracts, was not void. If erroneous, it could only be avoided by an appeal. It cannot be questioned in this collateral proceeding.

It results from what has been said that the conveyance by the trustees to the Southern Inland Navigation Company was subject to such decree as the court might render in the Vose suit; and as the decree of December 4, 1873, rescinded the agreements which the latter had with the former in respect to lands constituting a part of the trust fund, and restored to that fund the lands conveyed, or attempted to be conveyed, to that company by the trustees, the conveyance of February 10, 1871, and the mortgage of March 20, 1871, based upon it, is invalid as against the present Trustees of the Internal Improvement Fund of Florida. Decree affirmed.

GEORGE D. HULING ET AL., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
THE KAW VALLEY RAILWAY AND IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 559-565.)

Lands taken for railroad in Kansas—sufficiency of notice—nonresident owner, when bound—duty of owner—publication of notice—due process of law—objection to commissioner.

1. A notice, given by commissioners appointed to locate a railroad and assess damages for lands taken in its construction under the statute of Kansas, notifying all persons owning land on the line of the railroad in a certain section and township that the commissioners would proceed to lay out the route for said road through said section and assess the damages, is sufficient notice to the land owners.

2. The publication of such notice in the manner required by the statute is sufficient to subject the lands to the action of the commissioners and to warn the owners of property to appear and defend their interests.

3. The owner of real estate who is a nonresident, of the State within which the property lies, cannot evade the duties and obligations which the law imposes upon him in regard to such property by his absence from the State.

4. It is the duty of the owner of the real estate who is a nonresident, to take measures that, in some way, he shall be represented when his property is called into requisition; and if he fails to do this and fails to get notice by the publication required in such cases, it is his misfortune and he must abide the consequences.

5. Such publication is due process of law, as applied to this class of cases.

6. The objection that one of the commissioners was not a freeholder cannot avail to defeat the proceeding; such objection should be made either at the time of his appointment or at the time he proceeded to act as commissioner.

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought in the court below by the plaintiffs in error against the Kaw Valley Railway and Improvement Company, as defendant, in the nature of an action of trespass on land. It was in fact to recover for the value of land taken by the railroad for its right of way, and for damages to adjacent lands, houses, fences, and property, incident to the taking. The land was a part of a quarter section in Jackson Township, Wyandotte County, Kansas. The railway company answered by setting up proceedings which they had taken under the laws of Kansas for the condemnation of the land for the use of the railroad, and the payment of $725 into the treasury of that county in accordance with law, that being the amount which the commissioners who conducted the condemnation proceedings had allowed the plaintiffs. The defendants set out these proceedings in full, and relied upon them, as a sufficient defense for taking possession of and using the land.

The parties waived a jury, and the case was tried by the court, who found for the defendant, the railway company, and entered a judgment against the plaintiffs for the costs. We are called upon to review that judgment.

The record of the case is a very singular one, as there is no special finding of facts by the court, but a general finding in favor of the defendants. Instead, however, of a finding of facts, there is a bill of exceptions, which itself contains the entire history of the case, including the pleadings, the motions, the evidence, the judgment of the court, and all that is in the record besides. The only point raised by this bill of exceptions was as to the admission of the testimony of L. H. Wood, who acted as one of the commissioners by appointment of the District Judge of Wyandotte County, in which the land lay. The deposition of Wood was directed to the question whether he was a freeholder of Wyandotte County; and although he declared that at the time he was appointed as commissioner he was the owner of considerable real estate, upon further examination he stated that the title to it was in some other person, who held it as trustee for him. This attempt to raise the question of whether he was a freeholder within the meaning of the statute of Kansas on that subject was ruled out entirely by the exclusion of all his testimony on the trial; and this constitutes the principal assignment of error in the case.

Article 9 of chapter 23 of the Compiled Laws of Kansas, page 224, entitled "Appropriation of Lands for the Use of Railway and Other Corporations," provides two modes of doing this. The first of these modes is by an application to the board of county commissioners, which is the governing body of the county, to lay off along the line of the proposed road as located by the company a route for such railroad. Upon this application being made in writing, the board of county commissioners shall forthwith proceed to lay off such route, and have the same carefully surveyed, and appraise the value and assess the damages to the interest of each of the of the owners of the land so taken; all of which they shall embody in a written report and file it in the office of the county clerk in such county. The county clerk shall immediately file a copy of this report in the office of the treasurer of the county; and, if the company shall pay the amount of this appraisement into the treasurer's office, this shall be certified upon the copy of the report under his hand and seal of office, and he shall pay over the amounts to the persons, respectively, entitled to them. Upon the filing of a copy of this report, and a certificate of the payment of the money, in the office of the register of deeds for the proper county, the company shall have the right to occupy the lands so embraced within such route for the purposes necessary for the construction and use of its road. These proceedings, it is declared, shall vest in the company, its successors and assigns, the perpetual use of the lands as soon as the railroad has been constructed.

Section 86 of this article provides that before the county commissioners shall proceed to lay off any railroad route, notice of the time when the same shall be commenced shall be given by publication, thirty days before the time fixed, in some newspaper published in the county. It also provides that an appeal may be had from the determination of the board of county commissioners as to the value of the lands, and other damages to the district court of the county, which appeal shall only affect the amount of compensation to be allowed, but shall not delay the prosecution of the work, if the company shall pay the amount as aforesaid and execute a bond with sufficient security to pay all damages which may be adjudged to be paid by the said court.

Another mode of appropriating this land, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, for the use of railroads, is provided by section 87 of the same article. In this case, the railroad company, instead of applying to the board of county commissioners, may apply to the judge of the district court of the county through which the railroad is to be built, who shall appoint three commissioners, who shall be freeholders and residents of the county, to make the location, appraisement and assessment of damages, instead of the county commissioners. This appointment shall be made in writing under the hand of the district judge, upon the written application of the corporation or other persons, and the application for and certificate of appointment shall be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the proper county. Such commissioners, being duly sworn, shall perform all their duties in the manner and under the same regulations and restrictions as are provided in the case where they are performed by the county commissioners, and the subsequent proceedings, including the right of appeal, shall be the same.

In the case now before us the proceeding was had under the latter provision of the statute. The transcript on its face seems to be regular in every particular, showing a full compliance with all the requirements of the statute on the subject. There was the proper publication made in the newspaper; and, indeed, so far as the face of the record is concerned, no objection seems to be made to it, except that it is very urgently argued that the notice published was not sufficient because it did not apprise the party of what land was to be taken; and, if in that respect it was a sufficient compliance with the statute, it is then insisted that the statute itself was void as authorizing the taking of private property without due process of law.

In regard to this objection, we do not see how the notice is deficient, if any notice short of one actually served upon the party can be sufficient. With regard to the description of the property, the notice gives all that could be known at the time it was published. As the commissioners had the power to determine the precise location of the road, that location could not be described with more precision than it is in the newspaper publication set out in the proceedings. It is directed to all persons owning lands on the line of the railroad as the same is now or may be located through section 23, township 11, range 25, in the County of Wyandotte and State of Kansas; and it notified persons owning land in that section that the commissioners duly appointed would on Monday, the 22d of May, 1882, proceed to lay off the route for said road through said section and appraise the value and assess the damages to each quarter section through and over which the railroad might be located. To the plaintiffs in this case, who are the owners of a quarter section of land in section 23 of that township, this was a sufficient warning that the road might run through their land at that point, and sufficient notice of the time and place where this matter would be determined, as also the amount to which they would be entitled for the appropriation of their land. If this notice had been read by the plaintiffs, it was a clear and distinct notification to them that it would be determined at that time whether any, and how much, of their land in section 23 would be taken for the railroad, and the value to be set upon it by the commissioners; and we think that this was all the notice they had a right to require. Of course, the statute goes upon the presumption that, since all the parties cannot be served personally with such notice, the publication which is designed to meet the eyes of everybody, is to stand for such notice. The publication itself is sufficient if it had been in the form of a personal service upon the party himself within the county. Nor have we any doubt that this form of warning owners of property to appear and defend their interest, where it is subject to demands for public use when authorized by statute, is sufficient to subject the property to the action of the tribunals appointed by proper authority to determine those matters.

The owner of real estate who is a nonresident of the State within which the property lies, cannot evade the duties and obligations which the law imposes upon him in regard to such property, by his absence from the State. Because he cannot be reached by some process of the courts of the State, which, of course, have no efficacy beyond their own borders, he cannot therefore hold his property exempt from the liabilities, duties, and obligations which the State has a right to impose upon such property; and in such cases some substituted form of notice has always been held to be a sufficient warning to the owner, of the proceedings which are being taken under the authority of the State to subject his property to those demands and obligations. Otherwise the burdens of taxation, and the liability of such property to be taken under the power of eminent domain, would be useless in regard to a very large amount of property in every State of the Union.

It is, therefore, the duty of the owner of real estate who is a nonresident, to take measures that in some way he shall be represented when his property is called into requisition; and if he fails to do this, and fails to get notice by the ordinary publications which have usually been required in such cases, it is his misfortune, and he must abide the consequences. Such publication is "due process of law" as applied to this class of cases. Harvey v. Tyler, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 328 [17:871]; Secombe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 108 [23:67]; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 722, 743, 744 [24:568, 576]; Hagar v. Reclamation District, 111 U. S. 701 [28:569]; McMillen v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 37 [24:335]; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 105 [24:620]; Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 406 [25:206, 207].

Conceding that these proceedings subjected the land in controversy to the jurisdiction of the commissioners appointed by the District Judge of Wyandotte County, the question as to whether one of those commissioners was a freeholder or not is not open to consideration in this suit. The commissioners were regularly appointed by the proper officer, and took the proper oath, and have discharged their duties in the manner required by law. The railroad company has paid the money and taken possession of the land which was condemned by those commissioners. The plaintiffs cannot recover in the present action without a holding in this collateral proceeding that all that was done by those commissioners is void by reason of this want of qualification in one of their number. The proper time for these plaintiffs to have taken this objection to Mr. Wood as a commissioner was either at the time of his appointment, or at the time he proceeded to act as commissioner. If it be objected that they could not be supposed to have any notice of the application for the appointment of these commissioners, and of the time and place when the judge would act on that application, the law presumes that they had notice, and might have attended at the time the commissioners entered upon their duties. If this objection had been then taken, it might have been sustained, or it could have been taken by way of appeal from the proceedings of the commissioners; but to permit such an objection as this to prevail at this time, and thus defeat the whole of the proceedings upon this narrow ground, is a proposition unsupported by sound principle or by authority. It is a collateral attack upon a proceeding which has been completed according to the forms of law. There is no more reason why this want of qualification should, when shown at this stage of the proceeding, invalidate it all, than there is why the discovery, after a judgment and after that judgment has passed beyond the control of the court, that one of the jurors was disqualified, should make absolutely void the verdict and judgment. It is only one of those cases frequently occurring in the administration of the law, in which it is better that errors not pointed out at the proper time should be disregarded, than that, by attempts to correct them, evils much worse should follow than those incident to the error. Comrs. of Leavenworth Co. v. Espen, 12 Kan. 531; Venard v. Cross, 8 Kan. 248; Cooper v. Reynolds, 77 U. JEROME B. WHEELER ET AL.

Corporation may locate mining claim.

A corporation created under the laws of one of the States of the Union, all of whose members are citizens of the United States, is competent to locate or join in the location of a mining claim upon the public lands of the United States, in like manner as individual citizens.

Argued April 2, 1889. Decided May 13, 1889.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action for the possession of an undivided half interest in a mining claim. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hugh Butler and Wm. A. Maury for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. C. S. Thomas and T. M. Patterson for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for the possession of an undivided half interest in a mining claim known as the Vallejo lode, in the mining district of Roaring Forks, in the County of Pitkin, Colorado.

The plaintiff derives whatever interest he possesses by purchase and conveyance from the Josephine Mining and Prospecting Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Colorado, for the purpose of prospecting for valuable mineral deposits in the public domain of the United States in that State.

The Vallejo lode was discovered and located by that company and two persons named Charles Miller and James W. McGee, the location being in their joint name, one half interest for the benefit of Miller and McGee and the other half for the benefit of the members of the corporation. At the time of the discovery and location all the members of the corporation were citizens of the United States, and were severally and individually qualified and competent to enter upon the public domain and acquire title to mineral lands upon it by discovery and location.

The complaint, in addition to these facts, alleges that on the 11th of March, 1884, the plaintiff was and has since been the owner of an undivided half interest in the mining claim mentioned, which is described by metes and bounds as set forth in the original location certificate, and was then and has ever since been entitled to its possession; that on the 20th of October, 1884, the defendants entered upon the premises and wrongfully and unlawfully excluded the plaintiff therefrom, and have ever since thus excluded him, to his damage of one thousand dollars. He therefore prays judgment for the possession of an undivided half interest in the mining claim and for the damage alleged.

To this complaint, the material facts of which are set forth in two counts, the defendants demurred on several grounds, some of which are mere formal objections, but one of which is as follows: "Because the plaintiff bases his title or claim of ownership to an undivided one half of the said Vallejo lode mining claim upon a purchase and conveyance from the Josephine Mining Company, a locator of said claim; and that said company, whether a corporation or partnership, was and is incapable of originally locating a mining claim, in whole or in part, under the statutes of the United States or of the State of Colorado."

After argument the court sustained the demurrer, and entered judgment dismissing the action, with costs against the plaintiff, who has brought the case here on a writ of error.

As thus appears, the sole question presented for our determination is whether a corporation created under the laws of one of the States of the Union, all of whose members are citizens of the United States, is competent to locate or join in the location of a mining claim upon the public lands of the United States, in like manner as individual citizens. The question must, of course, find its solution in the enactments of Congress.

Section 2319 of the Revised Statutes provides as follows:

"All valuable mineral deposits in lands belonging to the United States, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and purchase, and the lands in which they are found, to occupation and purchase, by citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become such, under regulations prescribed by law, and according to the local customs or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States."

It will be observed that no prohibition is here made against citizens of the United States uniting together for the occupation and purchase of public lands containing "valuable mineral deposits." Nothing is said of partnerships or associations or corporations; it is to citizens that the privilege is granted, and that they may unite themselves in such modes in all other pursuits was, as a matter of course, well known to those who framed as well as to those who passed the statute. There was no occasion for special reference to the subject to give sanction to these modes of uniting means to explore for mineral deposits and to develop them when discovered. Many branches of mining, and those which yield the largest returns, can be carried on only by deep excavations in the earth and the use of powerful machinery, requiring expenditures generally far beyond the means of single individuals. In lode mining especially such excavations extend in most cases hundreds of feet, in many cases thousands of feet, into the earth, where, for successful working, the steam engine of great power is as essential an instrument as the pick and the shovel. It was expected, of course, that mining would continue after the passage of the Act as before. No change in that respect is needed or asked for. The object of the Act of May 10, 1872, from which the provisions of section 2319 were carried into the Revised Statutes, was "to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States." It is so expressed in its title, and such development is sought to be promoted by indicating the manner in which claims to mines can be established, and their extent, and by offering a title to the original discoverer or locator who should develop the mine discovered and located, or to his assigns.

At the present day, nearly all enterprises for the prosecution of which large expenditures are required, are conducted by corporations. They occupy in such cases almost all branches of industry, and prosecute them by means of the united capital of their members with increased success. In many States they are formed under general laws, by a very simple proceeding;—by an instrument signed by the proposed members agreeing to thus unite themselves, stating their number, the object of their incorporation, the proposed capital, the number of shares, the period of duration, and the officers under whose direction their business is to be conducted. Such a document being acknowledged by the parties and filed in certain designated offices, a corporation is created. The facility with which they may be thus formed, and the convenience of thus associating a number of persons for business, have led to an enormous increase of their number. They are little more than aggregations of individuals united for some legitimate business, acting as a single body, with the power of succession in its members without dissolution. We think, therefore, that it would be a forced construction of the language of the section in question, if, because no special reference is made to corporations, a resort to that mode of uniting interests by different citizens was to be deemed prohibited. There is nothing in the nature of the grant or privilege conferred which would impose such a limitation. It is in that respect unlike grants of land for homesteads and settlement, indicating in such cases that the grant is intended only for individual citizens.

The development of the mineral wealth of the country is promoted, instead of retarded, by allowing miners thus to unite their means. This is evident from the fact that so soon as individual miners find the necessity of obtaining powerful machinery to develop their mines, a corporation is formed by them; and it is well known that a very large portion of the patents for mining lands has been issued to corporations.

If we turn now to other provisions of the Revised Statutes we find that the conclusion which we have reached is justified by their language. Section 2321 provides as follows:

"Proof of citizenship, under this chapter, may consist, in the case of an individual, of his own affidavit thereof; in the case of an association of persons unincorporated, of the affidavit of their authorized agent, made on his own knowledge, or upon information and belief; and in the case of a corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, by the filing of a certified copy of their charter or certificate of incorporation."

Again, section 2325, in stating the manner and conditions under which a patent for a mining claim may be obtained, provides as follows:

"A patent for any land claimed and located for valuable deposits may be obtained in the following manner: Any person, association, or corporation authorized to locate a claim under this chapter, having claimed and located a piece of land for such purposes, who has or have complied with the terms of this chapter, may file in the proper land office an application for patent, under oath, showing such compliance," etc.

It will be thus seen that the statute itself assumes, what one would naturally infer without reference to it, that citizens of the United States are permitted to enjoy the privilege which is granted to them in their individual capacity, though they may unite themselves into an association or corporation.

The doctrine is well established that rights with respect to property held by citizens are not lost because they unite themselves into corporate bodies. They are subsequently as able to invoke the law for the enforcement of their rights as previously, the courts in such cases looking through the name in order to protect those whom the name represents. We have an illustration of this, as applied to corporations, in the construction given to the clause of the Constitution which extends the judicial power of the United States to controversies between citizens of the States and aliens, and between citizens of different States.

In Bank of the United States v. Deveaux, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 61, 87 [3: 38], the question arose whether a corporation composed of citizens of one State could sue in the Circuit Court of the United States a citizen of another State, and it was answered in the affirmative. In deciding the question, the court, speaking by Chief Justice Marshall, said: "However true the fact may be, that the tribunals of the States will administer justice as impartially as those of the nation, to parties of every description, it is not less true that the Constitution itself either entertains apprehensions on this subject, or views with such indulgence the possible fears and apprehensions of suitors that it has established national tribunals for the decision of controversies between aliens and a citizen, or between citizens of different States. Aliens, or citizens of different States, are not less susceptible of these apprehensions, nor can they be supposed to be less the objects of constitutional provision, because they are allowed to sue by a corporate name. That name, indeed, cannot be an alien or a citizen; but the persons whom it represents may be the one or the other; and the controversy is, in fact and in law, between those persons suing in their corporate character, by their corporate name, for a corporate right, and the individual against whom the suit may be instituted. Substantially and essentially the parties in such a case, where the members of the corporation are aliens, or citizens of a different State from the opposite party, come within the spirit and terms of the jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution on the national tribunals. Such has been the universal understanding on the subject. Repeatedly has this court decided causes between a corporation and an individual without feeling a doubt respecting its jurisdiction."

The doctrine of this case has been followed and is now the settled law in the courts of the United States. On the same principle, provisions of law, in terms applicable to persons, securing to them the enjoyment of their property or affording means for its protection, are held to embrace private corporations. The construction given to the 6th article of the definitive Treaty of Peace of 1783 between Great Britian and the United States illustrates this. (8 Stat. at L. 83.) That article provided that there should be "no future confiscations made, nor any prosecutions commenced against any person or persons, for or by reason of the part which he or they may have taken in the present war; and that no person shall, on that account, suffer any future loss or damage either in his person, liberty, or property." An English corporation held in Vermont certain lands granted to it before the Revolution, and the Legislature of that State undertook to confiscate them and give them to the town where they were situated. The English corporation claimed the benefit of this article, and recovered the property, against the contention that the treaty applied only to natural persons, and could not embrace corporations because they were not persons who could take part in the war, or could be considered British subjects, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Washington, observing that the argument proceeded upon an incorrect view of the subject, and referring to the case of the Bank of the United States v. Deveaux, to show that the court, when necessary, will look beyond the name of a corporation to the individuals whom it represents. Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. New Haven, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat, 464, 491 [5: 662]. Many other illustrations of the doctrine might be cited.

We are of opinion that the same rule of construction should control in this case, and that, in accordance with it, section 2319 of the Revised Statutes must be held not to preclude a private corporation formed under the laws of a State, whose members are citizens of the United States, from locating a mining claim on the public lands of the United States. There may be some question raised as to the extent of a claim which a corporation may be permitted to locate as an original discoverer. It may perhaps be treated as one person and entitled to locate only to the extent permitted to a single individual. That question, however, is not before us and does not call for an expression of opinion.

The objection to this construction arising from the fact that the section gives force, in the location of claims, to the rules and customs of miners, so far as applicable, when not in conflict with the laws of the United States, does not strike us as of great weight. A corporation interested in mining may be represented by an officer or agent, at any meeting of miners called together to frame such rules and regulations in their mining district. Corporations engaged in other business are constantly represented in this way, at meetings called in relation to matters in which they are interested. There is nothing in the nature of mining to prevent such a representation of a corporation, when rules to control the acquisition and development of mines are to be considered and settled.

It follows that the judgment of the Court below must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer of the defendants, and to take further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

v.
THE EAST TENNESSEE, VIRGINIA AND GEORGIA RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 637–642.)

Immunity from taxation—a personal privilege—not transferable—will not pass by sale of railroad and franchises—not a franchise.

1. Immunity from taxation is not in itself transferable.
2. Immunity from taxation may be granted; but it must be considered as a personal privilege not extending beyond the immediate grantee, unless otherwise so declared in express terms.
3. It will not pass merely by a conveyance of the property and franchises of a railroad company under a decree to enforce a lien, although such company may hold its property exempt from taxation.
4. Immunity from taxation is not a franchise of a railroad company which may be transferred, but is incapable of transfer without express statutory direction.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Tennessee, enjoining the collection of certain taxes, assessed against a railroad company. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. W. Pickle, Atty-Gen. of Tennessee, A. S. Marks and Vertrees & Vertrees, for appellant:

Immunity from taxation is not a "privilege." Wilson v. Gaines, 9 Baxt. 546; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 3 Tenn. Ch. 604; *Miss. & T. R. The exemption being property already in existence, and being one of the "privileges" of the railroad company which would give value to its railroad in the hands of a subsequent owner, the Legislature had the right to provide for a sale of the railroad with the incident attached. The property was already exempt, and it was merely to retain that quality after sale as before.

NOTE.—As to exemption from taxation; whether a contract or not; not implied; personal privilege, See note to Tucker v. Ferguson, 89 U. S., 22 L. ed. 805.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit to enjoin the collection of certain taxes for the years 1883 and 1884, assessed by the Board of Railroad Tax Assessors of Tennessee against the property of the complainant, the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad Company. The property formerly belonged to the Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston Railroad Company; and the claim asserted by the bill is that the property, whilst held by that company, was exempt from taxation, and that such exemption has accompanied it in its transfer to the complainant. That company was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature of Tennessee, passed November 18, 1853. Among other things the Act provided that whenever the company should have completed its road from Cumberland Gap to the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad, or to the southern boundary line of the State, it should "have all the rights and privileges" conferred by its charter for a period of ninety-nine years. (Acts of Tenn. 1853-4, chap. 301, § 6.) It also declared that the company should be vested, except as otherwise provided by its charter, with "all the rights, powers and privileges, and subject to all the restrictions and liabilities, of the Nashville and Louisville Railroad Company." An Act was passed by the Legislature of Tennessee on the 9th of February, 1850, to incorporate a company under this last name, which among other things declared "that the capital stock in the said company, the dividends thereon, and the roads and fixtures, depots, workshops, warehouses, and vehicles of transportation belonging to the said company shall be forever exempt from taxation in each and every of the said States of Tennessee and Kentucky, and it shall not be lawful for either of the said States, or any corporate or municipal, police or other authority thereof, or of any town, city, county or district thereof, to impose any tax on such stock or dividends, property or estate." (Acts of Tenn. 1849-50, chap. 76, § 40.)

It does not appear that any organization of this company was ever perfected. It is stated by counsel that none ever took place; and it would seem that such was the conclusion of this court in Goodlett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 122 U. S. 391, 406 [30: 1230, 1232].

Assuming, however, that its organization was perfected, its rights, powers and privileges were subject to the restrictions specified in the Act, and one of these was that the Act should "become a law whenever the State of Kentucky may enact the same for the same purpose, with such modifications and amendments" as she may deem right, not inconsistent with its provisions. By this restriction we understand that the Act was not to take effect until re-enacted by Kentucky, with such modifications as she might suggest, not inconsistent with it. It is conceded that Kentucky never passed any such Act as here mentioned. We are of opinion, therefore, that we may properly omit from consideration the Act of February 9, 1850, to incorporate the Nashville and Louisville Railroad Company, and the attempt to invest the Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston Railroad Company with its "rights, powers and privileges." If this construction be correct, the Nashville and Louisville Railroad Company never acquired under that Act any rights, powers or privileges, those designated in its charter being subject to restrictions, which were not complied with; and, therefore, whatever right the Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston Company possessed, to have its property exempted from taxation, must be found independently of the provision referring to and granting the exemption contained in the charter of the Nashville and Louisville Railroad Company. There is no such exemption from taxation in its own charter. It is, however, contended that provisions in an Act of the Legislature of the State, chartering the Lexington and Knoxville Railroad Company, passed on the 22d of December, 1853, had the effect of extending such exemption to the property of the Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston Railroad Company, inasmuch as it invests that company with the "rights, powers and privileges" "of the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad Company." (Acts of Tenn. 1853-4, chap. 325, § 6.) The Act incorporating this last company declared that its capital stock should be forever exempt from taxation, and that its road, "with all its fixtures and appurtenances, including workshops, warehouses, and vehicles of transportation," should be exempt from taxation for the period of twenty years from the completion of its road, and no longer, and that the road should be commenced within five years after the passage of the Act, and be finished within ten years thereafter, otherwise the charter should be void. (Acts of Tenn. 1847-8, chap. 120, § 30, 31.)

The answer avers that the road has never been completed, and no proof was offered to refute this averment. The burden of proof to show the completion was upon the complainant, for until then the exemption claimed could have no existence even while the property remained in the possession of the Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston Railroad Company.

Assuming, however, that we are mistaken in the construction given as to the effect of the provisions in the charters of the two companies, the Nashville and Louisville Railroad Company and the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad Company, and that the references to those companies are to be construed as embodying all "the rights, powers and privileges" which it was intended the Nashville and Louisville Railroad Company should possess if the Act creating its charter had been re-enacted by Kentucky, and which it was intended the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad Company should possess after the completion of its road, our conclusion upon the questions involved would not be affected. It is conceded that the property of the company passed upon sales and conveyances made under a decree rendered in a suit against the company commenced by the State of Tennessee, to parties who have since conveyed the same to the complainant. That suit was brought to enforce a statutory lien reserved by the State as security for the loan of her bonds issued to the company, and the sale made under the decree and confirmed was of the "property and franchises" of the railroad company.

By this sale and the conveyance which followed, immunity from taxation did not pass. Such immunity is not in itself transferable. It has been held, and the doctrine has been so often repeated that it is no longer an open question, that the Legislature of a State may exempt the property of particular persons or corporations from taxation, either for a limited period or perpetually; but to justify the conclusion that such exemption is granted, it must appear by language so clear and unmistakable as to leave no doubt of the purpose of the Legislature. The power of taxation is one of the highest attributes of sovereignty, and the suspension of its exercise as to any persons or property is not a matter to be presumed or inferred. It must be declared or it will not be deemed to exist. If the Legislature can lay aside a power devolved upon it for the good of the whole people of the State for the benefit of a private party, it must speak in such unmistakable terms that they will not admit of any reasonable construction consistent with the reservation of the power. The Delaware Railroad Tax, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 206, 225 [21: 888, 894].

Yielding to the doctrine that immunity from taxation may be granted, that point being already adjudged, it must be considered as a personal privilege not extending beyond the immediate grantee, unless otherwise so declared in express terms. The same considerations which call for clear and unambiguous language to justify the conclusion that immunity from taxation has been granted in any instance, must require similar distinctness of expression before the immunity will be extended to others than the original grantee. It will not pass merely by a conveyance of the property and franchises of a railroad company, although such company may hold its property exempt from taxation. As we said in Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 223 [23: 860, 861]: "The franchises of a railroad corporation are rights or privileges which are essential to the operation of the corporation, and without which its road and works would be of little value, such as the franchise to run cars, to take tolls, to appropriate earth and gravel for the bed of its road, or water for its engines, and the like. They are positive rights or privileges, without the possession of which the road of the company could not be successfully worked. Immunity from taxation is not one of them. The former may be conveyed to a purchaser of the road as part of the property of the company; the latter is personal, and incapable of transfer without express statutory direction."

It is true there are some cases where the term "privileges" has been held to include immunity from taxation, but that has generally been where other provisions of the Act have given such meaning to it. The later and, we think, the better opinion is that unless other provisions remove all doubt of the intention of the Legislature to include the immunity in the term "privileges," it will not be so construed. It can have its full force by confining it to other grants to the corporation.

The case of Railroad Company v. Hamblen County, 102 U. S. 273 [26: 152], was, with the exception of one particular, substantially like the one before us. The claim of exemption founded upon the Act of December 22, 1853, referring to the charter of the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad Company, was not there relied upon. Reliance was, however, placed upon the Act chartering the Nashville and Louisville Railroad Company as exempting the property of the Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston Railroad Company from taxation. The court held that immunity from taxation did not pass to the purchaser upon the sale of the property under the decree rendered in the suit brought by the State against the company.

The decree below must therefore be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to dismiss the bill, and it is so ordered.

Argued April 12, 1889. Decided May 13, 1889.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas, to review a judgment dismissing a complaint in an ejectment suit.

Certiorari ordered to bring up papers omitted from the transcript.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. F. Clark for plaintiff in error.

Mr. D. W. Jones for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas, in an ejectment suit brought in that court by Jared E. Redfield against William P. Parks and other defendants, in which a judgment was rendered on the 28th of April, 1885, dismissing the complaint on the merits. The plaintiff has brought the writ of error.

The suit appears to have been commenced on April 11, 1882. It appears from the transcript of the record filed in this court that a complaint and several answers were filed, and sundry exceptions, and that the case was tried by the court on the written waiver of a jury, and that the court, having heard the evidence of both parties, found the issues for the defendants. There is a bill of exceptions, which finds certain facts specially and certain conclusions of law in favor of the defendants, and contains exceptions by the plaintiff to those conclusions, and prayers to the court by the plaintiff to find certain conclusions of law, and a refusal by the court so to find, and exceptions by the plaintiff to such refusal.

We find it impossible, under our rules, to hear the case as it stands. The pleadings referred to in the transcript of the record are not set forth. Rule 8, subdivision 1, provides as follows: "1. The clerk of the court to which any writ of error may be directed shall make return of the same, by transmitting a true copy of the record and of the assignment of errors, and of all proceedings in the case, under his hand and the seal of the court." Rule 8, subdivision 3, provides as follows: "3. No case will be heard until a complete record containing in itself, and not by reference, all the papers, exhibits, depositions, and other proceedings, which are necessary to the hearing in this court, shall be filed."

The transcript of the record was filed in this court on April 5, 1886. The certificate of the clerk of the circuit court to the transcript is dated March 8, 1886, and does not comply with Rule 8, subdivision 1, for it only certifies "that the foregoing writing, annexed to this certificate, is a true, correct, and compared copy of the original remaining of record in my office." It does not say, as required by the rule, that the annexed papers are "a true copy of the record, and of the assignment of errors, and of all proceedings in the case." It is quite apparent that there are papers of record in the court below, a copy of which ought to form part of the transcript. The complaint and answers are necessary to the hearing in this court, and unless a record containing them is filed here the case cannot be heard.

As was said in Union Pac. R. Co. v. Stewart, 95 U. S. 279, 284 [24:431, 482], it is the duty of the party who takes a writ of error "to see to it that the record is properly presented here."

In Keene v. Whittaker, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 459 [10:246], the circuit court had given a judgment for the defendants, on an agreed case, and the record sent here, on a writ of error, contained only the agreed statement of facts and the judgment of the circuit court, with the petition for the writ of error and its allowance. At that time the 11th rule of the court was like the present Rule 8, subdivision 1, and the 31st rule was like the present Rule 8, subdivision 3. In view of those rules, and because the record did not contain any of the proceedings in the court below, this court dismissed the case.

The same thing was done in Curtis v. Petitpain, 59 U. S. 18 How. 109 [15:280], where the certified record consisted of an agreed statement of facts and a judgment.

While the court has undoubtedly the power to dismiss the case as for want of prosecution by the plaintiff in error, because of his failure to see that a proper return was filed, yet, as the transcript was filed here on the 5th of April, 1886, and more than three years have elapsed without the making of a motion by the defendants in error to dismiss the case because of a failure to comply with the rules, and the case has been submitted to us on printed briefs filed on both sides, on the merits, we think that the plaintiff in error ought to have leave to sue out a writ of certiorari, to bring into this court the papers omitted from the transcript. For this purpose a certiorari may, on his application to the clerk, issue, returnable at the next term.

THE ST. LOUIS SMELTING AND REFINING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 643-649.)

Obvious defect—covenant for quiet possession—when broken—tortious possession—false representations on sale of land—representations as to title—when merged in covenants.

1. The law does not afford relief to one who suffers by not using the ordinary means of information, whether his neglect be attributable to indifference or credulity.

2. The covenant for quiet possession, in a deed, merges all previous representations as to the possession, and limits the liability growing out of them.

3. If the occupant holds by a paramount title, and thus lawfully excludes the purchaser from possession, such covenant is broken.

4. If the occupation is without right, the remedy of the purchaser in such case is to dispossess the intruder. His occupation does not constitute a breach of the covenant.

5. An action may be maintained for false representations, upon the sale of real property, relating to matters collateral to the title and right of possession, such as the location, quantity, quality and condition of the land, the privileges connected with it, or the rents and profits derived therefrom.

6. Representations by the vendor as to his having title to the premises sold may also be the ground of action, where he is not in possession and has neither color nor claim of title, under any instrument purporting to convey the premises, or any judgment establishing his right to them.

7. But where the vendor, holding in good faith, under an instrument purporting to transfer the premises to him, or under a judicial determination of a claim to them in his favor, executes a conveyance to the purchaser, with a warranty of title and a covenant for peaceable possession, his previous representations as to the validity of his title or his right of possession, are mere expressions of confidence in his title, and are merged in the warranty and covenant, which determine the extent of his liability.

Submitted April 17, 1889. Decided May 13, 1889.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, to review a judgment dismissing, on demurrer to the complaint, an action for fraud and deceit. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Field:

On the 27th of March, 1879, the plaintiff below, a citizen of Colorado, purchased for the consideration of $875 a lot or parcel of land in the Town of Leadville, Colorado, described in the complaint, and took a conveyance of it from the defendant, the St. Louis Smelting and Refining Company, a corporation created under the laws of Missouri. The deed of conveyance contained covenants that the plaintiff was seised of an estate in fee simple of the premises; that they were clear of all liens and incumbrances; and that it would warrant and defend the grantee in their peaceable possession against all persons lawfully claiming the same or any part thereof.

NOTE.—For note on Covenant of Seisin, when broken, etc., see 49 U. S. 12 L. ed. 1152.

The complaint alleges, with much repetition and unnecessary verbiage, that prior to the purchase of the land, and pending negotiations for it, the officers, agents, and attorneys of the defendant represented to him that the company had secured the actual possession of the premises and obtained a release from all other parties claiming or pretending to claim the right of possession; that it would execute to him a good and sufficient warranty deed containing all the usual covenants, including one for quiet and peaceable possession; and assured him that if he would purchase and pay for the premises it could and would deliver to him immediate possession; that at that time there was a great rush of people to the Town of Leadville on account of the report of rich mineral discoveries in its immediate neighborhood; that there was a great struggle to secure possession of lots and business houses in the town; that there were many conflicting titles and claims to their possession; that amidst the general confusion and struggle and conflicting claims, the plaintiff was unable, after making due inquiry, and using all the diligence in his power, to find out whether the statements of the officers, agents, and attorneys of the defendant were true or false; that, therefore, relying upon their truth, and believing that they were made in good faith, he paid the $875 and took the deed of conveyance; that before and at the time he purchased, the defendant represented that it had received a patent from the Government of the United States for the premises as well as for a large number of other lots in the town, that no opposition would be made to its right of possession, and that no trouble would, therefore, occur, either in regard to the title or the possession of the premises; that these statements and assurances as to the defendant being able to put the plaintiff into immediate possession, and to having obtained a release from all parties who claimed an adverse title and right to the possession of the premises, and that it would put him into immediate possession, were false and fraudulent, and were made by the agents, officers, and attorneys of the defendant to deceive and defraud the plaintiff out of the money paid, knowing at the time that the defendant could not put him in possession of the premises; that when he attempted to enter upon them after his purchase he found that one Sarah Ray was in actual possession, claiming the same by virtue of prior possession and occupation on the public domain of the United States, under a town-site right, and refused to surrender them to him; that soon afterwards the company commenced an action of ejectment against her to recover the possession of the premises, but did not succeed in ejecting her and her tenants before the 22d of February, 1883, until which time the plaintiff was kept out of possession; and that during this period the rent of the premises was worth $400 a month, amounting, during the period mentioned, to $18,733, all of which the plaintiff alleges he lost by the fraud and deceit practiced upon him by the defendant besides the interest thereon. He therefore prays judgment thereon for $20,000 and costs.

To this complaint the defendant demurred on the following grounds:

1. That the complaint did not set forth facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

2. That several pretended causes of action had been improperly united therein, to wit:

(a) A pretended cause of action for breach of a parol contract to put the plaintiff in possession of the land described;

(b) For breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment contained in the plaintiff's deed;

(c) For deceit; and that these several causes of action had been improperly blended in one statement.

3. That the complaint was ambiguous, unintelligible, and uncertain, in this, that it did not appear how the plaintiff was misled or deceived by the pretended representations stated in the complaint.

The record also discloses what is called a "substituted demurrer," specifying various particulars in which the complaint was alleged to be unintelligible and uncertain, but as counsel of both parties give the demurrer above as the one on which the court below passed, it was so considered here. The court below sustained the demurrer, holding "that the complaint and the matters and things therein alleged were not sufficient in law for the said defendant to answer unto." The plaintiff thereupon stating that he would abide by his complaint, it was adjudged that the cause be dismissed with costs. To review this judgment the case is brought to this court.

Spear v. Allison, 20 Pa. 200; Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

As appears by the above statement, the gist of the action is the alleged deceit practiced upon the plaintiff by the agents, attorney, and officers of the company to induce him to purchase from it a lot in Leadville, by representing that it had obtained a release of the right of all claimants to the land, and could put him into immediate possession; whereas, upon attempting to enter upon the land purchased, he found another in possession, who refused to surrender it, and thus he was kept out of possession from the time of his purchase, March 27, 1879, to February 22, 1883, during which period he lost its rental value.

To this ground of complaint there are two obvious answers. In the first place, the plaintiff could have required the delivery of the possession of the land to accompany the payment of the money. The lot being in the town might have been readily reached, when the ability of the company to give possession could have been at once determined. The plaintiff alleges that he used all diligence in his power to find out whether the representations of the officers, agents, and attorneys of the company were true or false, but the inspection of the premises, the most natural and obvious mode of ascertaining whether they were occupied by another, does not seem to have been resorted to. The law does not afford relief to one who suffers by not using the ordinary means of information, whether his neglect be attributable to indifference or credulity; nor will industrious activity in other directions, to the neglect of such means, be of any avail.

Besides, it does not appear at what time the party in possession entered upon the land. The complaint only alleges that when—the time not being stated—the plaintiff attempted to take possession, he found another person there, who, for aught that appears, may have gone on the land after the execution and delivery of the deed. There was at the time, according to the allegations of the complaint, a great struggle to obtain possession of lots among the crowd of persons pressing to the town owing to the report of rich gold discoveries within its immediate neighborhood. The claim of right to the land advanced by the occupant was founded only upon her alleged prior possession of it as a part of the public domain of the United States, a claim which would seem, from the result of the ejectment suit against her brought by the company, to have been entirely worthless. The complaint alleges that the defendant represented that it had received a patent from the Government of the United States for the premises, as well as for a large number of other lots in the town, and contains no averment that this representation was untrue. It may therefore be fairly presumed, that upon the title thus conferred, the company subsequently evicted the intruder. The possession of a patent of the United States would have justified all the representations alleged, as to title and right of possession, and the purchaser might have called for an inspection of that document if doubtful of the statements of the agents and officers of the vendor.

In the second place, the covenant in the deed for quiet possession merged all previous representations as to the possession, and limited the liability growing out of them. Those representations were to a great extent, if not entirely, mere expressions of confidence in the company's title, and the right of possession which followed it, against all intruders. The covenant was an affirmance of those statements in a form admitting of no misunderstanding. It was the ultimate assurance given, upon which the plaintiff could rely, a guaranty against disturbance by a superior title. That covenant has not been broken. It is a covenant against disturbance by "persons lawfully claiming" the premises or any part thereof. If the occupant holds by a paramount title, and thus lawfully excludes the purchaser from possession, the covenant is broken. But it is not broken by a tortious disturbance. If the occupation is without right, the remedy of the purchaser is to dispossess the intruder. His occupation does not constitute a breach of the covenant. Beebe v. Swartwout, 3 Gilman, 162, 179; Kelly v. Dutch Church of Schenectady, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 105, 111.

False and fraudulent representations upon the sale of real property may undoubtedly be ground for an action for damages, when the representations relate to some matter collateral to the title of the property, and the right of possession which follows its acquisition, such as the location, quantity, quality, and condition of the land, the privileges connected with it, or the rents and profits derived therefrom. Lysney v. Selby, 2 Ld. Raym. 1118; Dobell v. Stevens, 3 Barn. & C. 623; Monell v. Colden, 13 Johns. 396; Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. 260; Van Epps v. Harrison, 5 Hill, 63. Such representations by the vendor as to his having title to the premises sold may also be the ground of action where he is not in possession, and has neither color nor claim of title under any instrument purporting to convey the premises, or any judgment establishing his right to them. Thus in Wardell v. Fosdick, 13 Johns. 325, an action for deceit was sustained against the vendor of land which had no actual existence, the court holding that in such case the purchaser might treat the deed as a nullity. The land not being in existence there could be no possession, and of course no eviction, and consequently no remedy upon the covenants; and the purchaser would be remediless if he could not maintain the action. But where the vendor, holding in good faith under an instrument purporting to transfer the premises to him, or under a judicial determination of a claim to them in his favor, executes a conveyance to the purchaser, with a warranty of title and a covenant for peaceable possession, his previous representations as to the validity of his title, or the right of possession which it gives, are regarded, however highly colored, as mere expressions of confidence in his title, and are merged in the warranty and covenant, which determined the extent of his liability.

Judgment affirmed.

GEORGE M. PETERS, Appt.,
v.
THE ACTIVE MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 626-629.)

Patent void for want of novelty—dies for dash frames.

1. The patent granted to George M. Peters July 17, 1883, for an improvement in dies for making dash frames, is void for want of invention.

2. Dies which act upon two pieces of metal which are capable of being welded to each other, and which are brought to a welding heat, necessarily will weld them together by the impact and action of the dies. There is no patentable invention in securing the result of welding or swaging by the action of dies, if there be no patentable invention in the construction and use of the dies to produce a given shape in the article acted upon by them.

Submitted April 16, 1889. Decided May 13, 1889.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio, that the patent, No. 281,553, granted to George M. Peters for an improvement in dies for making dash frames, is void, and dismissing the action for its infringement. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Wm. Hubbell Fisher for appellant.

Mr. Arthur Stem for appellee.

Mr. Justice Blatchford delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity, brought in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio, by George M. Peters against The Active Manufacturing Company, a corporation, founded on the alleged infringement of letters patent No. 281,553, granted to said Peters, July 17, 1883, on an application filed December 7, 1880, for an "improvement in dies for making dash frames." A dash frame is made of metal, and is to be used in constructing a dash board for a carriage or other vehicle.

The defenses set up in the answer are want of novelty, noninfringement, and also that the devices described and claimed in the patent were, before the alleged invention thereof by Peters, old and well known in forging, welding, and other metal working, and that it required no invention to apply or adapt such devices to the old form and construction of dash frames. Issue was joined, proofs were taken, and the circuit court, in its decree, found that the patent was "void for want of invention," and dismissed the bill. We concur in that conclusion.

The specification of the patent says: "The principal object of my invention is to provide an efficient and useful method of welding the end bars of a metal dash frame to the bottom rail, and a method by which the bottom rail of the dash is strengthened at the weld and at the portion of said rail to which the dash foot is to be attached. Another object of my invention is to provide a means by which a recess is formed in the bottom rail, preparatory to punching said rail, to receive the bolt or other attachment which secures the dash foot to the bottom rail, the operation of forming the recess being performed at the same time that the end bar is welded to the bottom rail."*

The entire operation set forth in the specification, of welding the bars to the rail, of strengthening the bottom rail of the dash, and of forming a recess in the bottom rail at the same time that the welding is done, is described in the specification as effected by one and the same simultaneous action of two opposing dies, an upper die and a lower die, placed face to face. The dies are provided with channels or depressions, one, a, to receive the end bar of the frame, and the other, a', to receive the bottom rail, the channels, $a\,a'$, of one die coinciding with like channels in the other die, when the two dies are placed together. From the bottom of the depressions a' in the two dies rise tongues, a^2, which, like the depressions a, coincide with each other when the two dies are placed together, the tongues preferably not rising quite to the face of the dies, so that, when the dies are placed together, a slight space is left between the two tongues. The specification also states that, preferably, the tongues a^2 are so formed that when the dies are placed together the tongues will approach closer to each other at that portion of themselves which forms that part of the web in the lower bar which is to be punched through to receive the bolt or other device by which the dash frame is connected to the foot or vehicle, than at any other point; in other words, the face of the tongues is inclined. The object of such a formation of the tongues is stated in the specification to be, to make the web left in the bottom rail thinner in that portion of such rail where perforations are to be made to receive the bolts which secure the dash-foot to the frame, the web being in other portions preferably left of a uniform thickness; and one of the objects of thus making the web thin is to enable it to be more readily punched or otherwise perforated. By means of those dies a recess is formed in either side of the bottom rail, which recess corresponds with the tongues a^2 of the dies.

The four claims of the patent are as follows: "1. The combination, substantially as set forth, of the two dies having opposing angularly-joined depressions, a a', and a tongue, a^2, in the depression a' of either or both dies. 2. The combination, substantially as set forth, of the two dies having opposing angularly-joined depressions, a a', and a tongue, a^2, in the depression a^2 of either or both dies, the depressions a' deepening toward their junctions with the depressions a. 3. The combination, substantially as before set forth, of the dies having opposing angularly-joined depressions, a a' and a tongue, a^2, in either or both of the said depressions, the face of said tongue or tongues being inclined. 4. The combination, substantially as before set forth, of the dies having opposing angularly-joined depressions, a a', and a tongue, a^2, in either or both of the said depressions, the depressions a' deepening toward their junctions with the depressions a, and the face of the tongue or tongues being inclined."

The whole of this alleged invention is based upon the idea, old and well known, that a metallic die, whether of a cameo or intaglio form, will, when impressed upon a piece of heated or yielding metal, leave the latter of the converse form of the die, and that, when two dies are brought together over a piece of heated or yielding metal, the latter will take the shape of the space existing between the contours of the two dies. It is an inevitable consequence of the use of two dies in such a way, on two pieces of metal of proper size, heated to a welding heat, that swaging or welding will take place by the impact of the dies; that, when the dies have tongues and depressions in them, the metal acted on by such tongues and depressions will take the shape, in form and thickness, of the space left between the tongues or the depressions; and that a greater or less thickness of metal will be the result as the face of the tongues is more or less inclined. All this was old and common knowledge; and the whole of the operation resulting from such features is nothing but the well known action of two dies so shaped as to give the desired conformation to the article acted upon by them.

If it was desired to preserve a channel in the bottom rail of the dash frame, when the bottom rail was made of channeled iron, it was obvious, and not a matter of invention, that the die must be provided with a tongue to fit into the channel, to prevent the filling up of the channel by the forcing into it of metal by the action of the dies in welding the two pieces together. So, too, if it was desirable to make the welded parts thicker, and thus stronger, at the angle formed by the end bar and the bottom rail, it was obvious that the bottoms of the recesses in the dies must be deepened at such angle. That is all there is of the alleged invention of Peters.

It appears from the testimony that it was not new, at the time of such alleged invention, to use channeled iron in making dash frames; or new to weld channeled iron to flat or oval bars of iron; or new to use dies for swaging or welding together two pieces of iron. All that remained to be done in the present case, as in other cases, was to adapt the form of the dies to the shape desired in the article to be acted upon by them. Dies which act upon two pieces of metal which are capable of being welded to each other, and which are brought to a welding heat, necessarily will weld them together by the impact and action of the dies. There is no patentable invention in securing such result of welding or swaging, if there be no patentable invention in the construction and use of the dies to produce a given shape in the article acted upon by them.

The decree of the Circut Court is affirmed.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia, to review a judgment for defendant in an action brought to recover for injuries received by plaintiff by reason of defendant's train leaving the track, while plaintiff was acting as engineer. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This is an action on the case brought by Dunlap against the Northeastern Railroad Company to recover for injuries received during the month of August, 1882, by reason of a train belonging to defendant leaving the track, while Dunlap was acting as engineer.

The Code of Georgia (1882, pp. 509, 762) provides as follows:

"§ 2083. Liability of railroad companies as carriers.—Railroad companies are common carriers, and liable as such. As such companies necessarily have many employees who cannot possibly control those who should exercise care and diligence in the running of trains, such companies shall be liable to such employees as to passengers for injuries received from the want of such care and diligence."

"§ 3036. Injury by co-employee.—If the person injured is himself an employee of the company, and the damage was caused by another employee, and without fault or negligence on the part of the person injured, his employment by the company shall be no bar to recovery."

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the accident happened in consequence of the roadbed being defective to such an extent and under such circumstances as to render defendant liable; while defendant claimed that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, because he was running faster than twenty miles an hour, the superintendent having instructed him not to exceed that speed; because he made use of intoxicating drinks while on duty; and because the rules of the company limited speed to ten miles an hour before crossing trestles and bridges, while the place of the accident was near a trestle and plaintiff was running at a greater rate than ten miles an hour.

Evidence was adduced tending to sustain plaintiff's contention, and to refute that of defendant, as to a rate of speed exceeding twenty miles an hour, and the use of intoxicating liquors; and also to show that plaintiff was a locomotive engineer in the employment of the Richmond and Danville Railroad, and during the month of August, 1882, was sent to relieve an engineer on the Northeastern Railroad; that he relieved him on Saturday, on which day he hauled dirt, and that on Saturday evening he went to Tallulah Falls and got his train conductor, and from there to Athens, Sunday, and started out on Monday, on the evening of which day the accident occurred; that he had never been over the road before and had no experience of it or knowledge of the track; that he had never seen or read the train rules governing the running of trains on the road; that while he had been over the road once and returned, it was impossible for him, upon so slight an experience, to remember at night just where the trestles were; and that he did not know at the time that this particular trestle was immediately in front of him. Defendant's superintendent testified that he understood that Dunlap had never been over the road but once; that he explained to him Monday morning that he had a safe conductor and good set of brakemen, and that he could rely upon the conductor; that he "talked with him about the train and the track, and the conductor, and the equipment of the train, and about the pilot and the pilot's duty, and about the character of the conductor and the character of the run generally, and the rate of speed, which was from eighteen to twenty miles an hour—not to exceed twenty;" and that he did not know "that Mr. Dunlap ever saw our train rules or read them." There was some controversy as to the existence of the rule as stated, at the time of the accident, but there was no dispute that the train was running more than ten miles an hour.

The court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, which being done and judgment rendered thereon, the cause was brought here on writ of error.

Mr. Hoke Smith, for plaintiff in error:

To constitute contributory negligence there must be a want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff and a proximate connection between that and the injury.

S. 439 (24: 506); Pleasants v. Fant, 89 U. S. 22 Wall. 116 (22: 780).

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The circuit court erred in not submitting the question of contributory negligence to the jury, as the conclusion did not follow, as matter of law, that no recovery could be had upon any view which could be properly taken of the facts the evidence tended to establish. Kane v. Northern Central R. Co. 128 U. S. 91 [ante, 339]; Jones v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 128 U. S. 443 [ante, 478].

It is urged that the exceptions were not properly saved, and therefore that they should be disregarded. There is some obscurity in the record upon this subject, but upon the whole we think that enough appears to enable us to pass upon the question presented. The bill of exceptions shows that certain instructions, numbered 1 and 2, were requested by plaintiff and refused, and certain instructions, numbered 3 and 4, objectionable or adverse to plaintiff, were given; and it is stated by the court that "The plaintiff's counsel presented his requests in writing before the charge of the court began. The court instructed the jury to find for the defendant, without notice to plaintiff's counsel that the requests would not be given, and there was no opportunity for counsel to except to the failure of the court to charge as requested until the instructions were given to the jury. The exceptions therefore, contained in Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 were not taken or noted during the trial." But the bill of exceptions also states: "V. The court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant. VI. The jury returned a verdict in accordance with said instructions, and judgment was thereupon entered up in behalf of defendant in pursuance of said instructions; and to said instructions, verdict, and judgment the plaintiff, by his counsel, excepted and now excepts, during the term at which said case was tried and while said term is still in session, and assigns the same as error, and prays the court to sign and certify this exception."

We understand from this language, taken together, that the general instruction of the court to find for the defendant was excepted to at the proper time; and while greater accuracy of expression should have been used, we are not inclined by too technical a construction to preclude ourselves from correcting the error we hold was committed.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial. Reversed.

JOHN L. HAYNES ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 653-654.)

Jurisdiction as to amount—suit on official bond—Rev. Stat. § 699.

1. Where the amount in dispute is less than $5,000, and the case does not come within any of the classes specified in section 699 of the Revised Statutes, in which this court has appellate jurisdiction without regard to the sum or value in dispute, the case must be dismissed.
2. A suit upon an official bond is not an action for the enforcement of a revenue law of the United States.
3. The third subdivision of section 699 applies only to suits, whether sounding in tort or in contract, brought by individuals or corporations against officers of the revenue acting on behalf of the United States, and does not include any suit brought by the United States against one of those officers.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Texas, to review a judgment for the defendants in an action brought by the United States against the principal and sureties on the official bond of a collector of customs to recover moneys in his hands. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. A. Jenks, Solicitor-Gen., for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Charles W. Ogden for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action brought by the United States against the principal and sureties on the official bond of a collector of customs, to recover the sum of $634.60, which he had refused to pay over, and claimed the right to retain as part of the emoluments of his office. The circuit court gave judgment for the defendants, and the United States sued out this writ of error, which the defendants in error now move to dismiss for want of jurisdiction.

The motion to dismiss must be granted. The amount in dispute is less than $5,000; and the case does not come within any of the classes specified in § 699 of the Revised Statutes, in which this court has appellate jurisdiction without regard to the sum or value in dispute. The only subdivisions which could possibly be supposed to cover this case are the second and third.

The second subdivision relates to judgments "in any civil action brought by the United States for the enforcement of any revenue law thereof;" and, as was directly adjudged in the recent case of United States v. Hill, 123 U. S. 681 [31: 275], a suit upon an official bond is not an action for the enforcement of a revenue law of the United States.

The third subdivision relates to judgments "in any civil action against any officer of the revenue, for any act done by him in the performance of his official duty, or for the recovery of any money exacted by or paid to him which shall have been paid into the Treasury." This applies only to suits, whether sounding in tort or in contract, brought by individuals or corporations against officers of the revenue acting on behalf of the United States, and does not include any suit brought by the United States against one of those officers. It has regard to actions in which the interest of the United States is as defendants, not as plaintiffs.

Writ of error dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF LAKE, Plff. in Err.,
v.
FRANK W. ROLLINS

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 662-674.)

Constitution—interpretation of—construction of statute—constitutional prohibition against county incurring debts—Colorado Constitution—liability of county on county warrants.

1. When the text of a constitutional provision is not ambiguous, the courts, in giving construction thereto, are not at liberty to search for its meaning beyond the instrument.
2. If the words convey a definite meaning which involves no absurdity, nor any contradiction of other parts of the instrument, then that meaning, apparent on the face of the instrument, must be accepted.
3. Where a law is expressed in plain and unambiguous terms, whether those terms are general or limited, the Legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed. There is even stronger reason for adhering to this rule in the case of a Constitution than in that of a statute.
4. The Legislature cannot impose upon a county a compulsion to incur debt; nor can a county voluntarily assume it, as against the disability of a constitutional prohibition.
5. Section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution of Colorado is a limitation upon the power of the county to contract any and all indebtedness, including the county warrants for county expenses sued upon in this action.
6. A county in Colorado cannot be made liable for a debt contracted above the amount fixed by said constitutional provisions, although the debt is for ordinary county expenses, evidenced by county warrants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Daniel E. Parks and H. B. Johnson, for plaintiff in error:

The adoption of a constitutional limitation like the one under consideration prohibits the incurring of indebtedness under propositions that have already been voted upon by the people.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado. It is a suit against the County of Lake, in that State, and is based on a large number of county warrants issued for the ordinary county expenses, such as witnesses' and jurors' fees, election costs, charges for the board of prisoners, county treasurer's commissions, etc.

The county has offered several defenses; but the view we take of the case renders it unnecessary to notice any save one.

The fifth defense offered is that of want of authority on the part of the county commissioners to issue the warrants in question or any of them. It is claimed that section six, article eleven, of the State Constitution of 1876, fixes a maximum limit, beyond which no county can contract any indebtedness, and that the warrants sued on were all issued after that limit had been reached, and even exceeded; and that they are all, for that reason, void.

The constitutional provision in question is as follows:

"No county shall contract any debt by loan in any form, except for the purpose of erecting necessary public buildings, making or repairing public roads and bridges; and such indebtedness contracted in any one year shall not exceed the rates upon the taxable property in such county following, to wit: counties in which the assessed valuation of taxable property shall exceed five millions of dollars, one dollar and fifty cents on each thousand dollars thereof; counties in which such valuation shall be less than five millions of dollars, three dollars on each thousand dollars thereof; and the aggregate amount of indebtedness of any county, for all purposes, exclusive of debts contracted before the adoption of the Constitution, shall not at any time exceed twice the amount above herein limited, unless when, in manner provided by law, the question of increasing such debt shall, at a general election, be submitted to such of the qualified electors of such county as in the year last preceding such election shall have paid a tax upon property assessed to them in such county, and a majority of those voting thereon shall vote in favor of increasing the debt; but the bonds, if any be issued therefor, shall not run less than ten years; and the aggregate amount of debt so contracted shall not at any time exceed twice the rate upon the valuation last herein mentioned; Provided, That this section shall not apply to counties having a valuation of less than one million of dollars."

To this defense the plaintiff below responded to the effect that the provision quoted was not applicable to the warrants in question; that it is properly applicable only to debts created by loan, for the purpose of erecting necessary public buildings or making or repairing public roads and bridges; and that as to debts so created by loan for the purposes designated and as to them alone, a limitation of amount is fixed, first, as to the sum that may be incurred in any one year, and secondly, as to the aggregate sum that may be incurred by the accumulating debts of more than one year; and that these objects and restrictions exhaust the scope of the provision.

The cause was tried below on an agreed state of facts, before the court, on the written waiver of a jury. In the agreement is found the following stipulation:

"It is further stipulated and agreed that if section six (6) of article eleven (11) of the Constitution of the State of Colorado, be construed to be a limitation upon the power of defendant county to contract any and all indebtedness, including all such as that sued upon in this action, then it is admitted that the claimed indebtedness sued on herein was incurred after the limitation prescribed by said Constitution had been reached and exceeded by the said defendant, the County of Lake; and in the event of such a construction by this court, or the Supreme Court of the United States, then and in that case, and for the purposes of this action, it is hereby also admitted that all the allegations of the fifth separate defense to this action of the answer of the defendant are true and correct, and the defendant entitled to judgment thereon."

The court below held (34 Fed. Rep. 845): First, that the said section six, in all of its sentences, does not refer exclusively to debts contracted by loan, but there are two independent declarations in it, the second declaration beginning with the words, "and the aggregate amount of indebtedness of any county, for all purposes, etc.;" secondly, that in determining whether the limit of county indebtedness, fixed by the second declaration, had been reached, it is immaterial how any particular portion of the indebtedness arose; but that, thirdly, when such limit had been reached, while the power of the county to incur further debt by contract was suspended, the liability for further amounts in the shape of fees and salaries, and other "compulsory obligations" imposed by the will of the Legislature, remained and was enforceable. Proceeding on this idea, the circuit court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff below; whereupon the county brought the case here by writ of error.

We are unable to assent either to the conclusions of the court below, or to the positions of defendant in error. The language of the sixth section seems to be neither complicated nor doubtful; and we think it plain that what is meant is exactly what is said; no more and no less. It deals with the subject of county debts, and, to begin with, assumes a unit of measurement which is one and one half dollars in the thousand of assessed values; that is, one and and half mills on the dollar. This is about equal to the average amount of taxes levied for county purposes per annum under normal conditions. The provision then proceeds as follows:

First. It provides that no county shall borrow money in any way;

Secondly. Exception is then made in favor of the erection of necessary public buildings, and the making or repairing of public roads and bridges; and,

Thirdly. The loans allowed by the foregoing exception to be taken in any one year are limited to the amount of one and one half mills on assessed values in one class of counties, and three mills in another class.

Here the matter of indebtedness by loan is completed; and the section passes to a broader subject. Manifestly, the purpose of the collocation of the two passages in one section is not that by a wrested reading the latter may yet further limit and complicate the power of borrowing; but that the meaning of the latter passage may be more sharply and clearly defined and emphasized by an antithesis. It is an example not of inadvertence, but of good rhetoric, as if special attention had been by discussion and care given to the wording of the section.

The next provisions are:

Fourthly. That the aggregate debt of any county for all purposes (exclusive of debts contracted before the adoption of the Constitution) shall not at any time exceed the sum of three mills (or six, as the case might be) on assessed values; unless the taxpayers vote in favor of such excess, at some general election; and Fifthly. That even when an election has been held, the aggregate debt so contracted shall not exceed, at any one time, the sum of six mills (or twelve as the case might be) on the assessed values.

We are unable to adopt the constructive interpolations ingeniously offered by counsel for defendant in error. Why not assume that the framers of the Constitution, and the people who voted it into existence, meant exactly what it says? At the first glance, its reading produces no impression of doubt as to the meaning. It seems all sufficiently plain; and in such case there is a well settled rule which we must observe. The object of construction, applied to a Constitution, is to give effect to the intent of its framers, and of the people in adopting it. This intent is to be found in the instrument itself; and when the text of a constitutional provision is not ambiguous the courts, in giving construction thereto, are not at liberty to search for its meaning beyond the instrument.

To get at the thought or meaning expressed in a statute, a contract or a Constitution, the first resort, in all cases, is to the natural signification of the words, in the order of grammatical arrangement in which the framers of the instrument have placed them. If the words convey a definite meaning, which involves no absurdity nor any contradiction of other parts of the instrument, then that meaning, apparent on the face of the instrument, must be accepted, and neither the courts nor the Legislature have the right to add to it or take from it. Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 97; Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86; Denn v. Reid, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 524 [9: 519]; Leonard v. Wiseman, 31 Md. 204; People v. Potter, 47 N. Y. 375; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 57; Story, Const. § 400; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 34. So, also, where a law is expressed in plain and unambiguous terms whether those terms are general or limited, the Legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed, and consequently no room is left for construction. United States v. Fisher, 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 358, 399 [2: 304, 317]; Doggett v. Florida R. Co. 99 U. S. 72 [25: 301].

There is even stronger reason for adhering to this rule in the case of a Constitution than in that of a statute, since the latter is passed by a deliberative body of small numbers, a large proportion of whose members are more or less conversant with the niceties of construction and discrimination, and fuller opportunity exists for attention and revision of such a character, while Constitutions, although framed by conventions, are yet created by the votes of the entire body of electors in a State, the most of whom are little disposed, even if they were able, to engage in such refinements. The simplest and most obvious interpretation of a Constitution, if in itself sensible, is the most likely to be that meant by the people in its adoption.

Such considerations give weight to that line of remark of which People v. Purdy, 2 Hill, 35, affords an example. There, Bronson, J., commenting upon the danger of departing from the import and meaning of the language used to express the intent, and hunting after probable meanings not clearly embraced in that language, says: "In this way the Constitution is made to mean one thing by one man and something else by another, until in the end it is in danger of being rendered a mere dead letter, and that, too, when the language is so plain and explicit that it is impossible to mean more than one thing, unless we lose sight of the instrument itself and roam at large in the fields of speculation."

Words are the common signs that mankind make use of to declare their intention to one another; and when the words of a man express his meaning plainly, distinctly and perfectly, we have no occasion to have recourse to any other means of interpretation.

Defendant in error insists that the interpretation contended for by the county leads to certain absurd consequences, viz., that it is senseless to limit the power of a county to incur debt generally, since its exercise of such a power may, by sudden exigencies, become imperatively necessary to the discharge of its functions; that it would be to require the county to provide in advance by taxation or otherwise, for the payment of expenses, which, from their nature, can only be guessed at; that it would be to enable any county in two years, by a vote and a loan, to exhaust the whole possible indebtedness in the way of buildings, roads and bridges, leaving no margin for other necessities; that it would be to destroy the county governments, since the county officials and others will not work for nothing, and the margin of possible debt is, in nearly all the counties, already reached; and that it would be to avoid nearly all the tax payments heretofore made in warrants. All of these objections could well be answered from the facts as disclosed by the bill of exceptions; but it is not necessary.

We cannot say, as a matter of law, that it was absurd for the framers of the Constitution for this new State to plan for the establishment of its financial system, on a basis that should closely approximate the basis of cash. It was a scheme favored by some of the ablest of the earlier American statesmen. Nor can the fact disclosed in the bill of exceptions, that, after the adoption of the State Constitution, the county officials and many of the people, designedly or undesignedly, disregarded the constitutional rule, render the plan absurd. If it was a mistaken scheme, if its operation has proved or shall prove to be more inconvenient than beneficial, the remedy is with the people, not with the courts.

In Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Taylor County, 52 Wis. 37, the court says: "We have been urged with great ability to give the section such construction as to forever prevent unjust discrimination by the Legislature; and grave consequences have been assumed as the result of a different construction. On the other hand, we have been urged with equal ability that such a decision would unseat many titles, stop revenue, necessitate a revision of the laws of taxation, and possibly the calling of a constitutional convention. The answer to all this is obvious. It is no part of the duty of the court to make or unmake, but simply to construe this provision of the Constitution. All questions of policy; all questions of restriction and unjust discrimination; all questions of flexibility and adjustability to meet the varied wants and necessities of the people—must be regarded as having been fully considered and conclusively determined by the adoption of the Constitution. The oath of all is to support it as it is, and not as it might have been. To do so may, in some cases, lead to individual hardships; but to do otherwise would be most portentous with evil." In Law v. People, 87 Ill. 395, the court said: "But, should it work hardship to individuals, that by no means warrants the violation of a plain and emphatic provision of the Constitution. The liberty of the citizen, and his security in all his rights, in a large degree depend upon a rigid adherence to the provisions of the Constitution and the laws, and their faithful performance. If courts, to avoid hardships, may disregard and refuse to enforce their provisions, then the security of the citizen is imperiled. Then the will, it may be the unbridled will, of the judge would usurp the place of the Constitution and the laws; and the violation of one provision is liable to speedily become a precedent for another, perhaps more flagrant, until all constitutional and legal barriers are destroyed, and none are secure in their rights. Nor are we justified in resorting to strained construction or astute interpretation, to avoid the intention of the framers of the Constitution, or the statutes adopted under it, even to relieve against individual or local hardships. If unwise or hard in their operation, the power that adopted can repeal or amend, and remove the inconvenience. The power to do so has been wisely withheld from the courts, their functions only being to enforce the laws as they find them enacted."

In the light of these principles, expressed in the authorities quoted and in many others, we must decline to read the expression in section six, "and the aggregate amount of indebtedness of any county, for all purposes," etc., as if it were written "and the aggregate amount of such indebtedness," etc. This the defendant in error concedes to be necessary to his case. We see no admissible reason for the introduction of this restrictive word such, except to alter radically the plain meaning of the sentence.

Neither can we assent to the position of the court below that there is, as to this case, a difference between indebtedness incurred by contracts of the county and that form of debt denominated "compulsory obligations." The compulsion was imposed by the Legislature of the State, even if it can be said correctly that the compulsion was to incur debt; and the Legislature could no more impose it than the county could voluntarily assume it, as against the disability of a constitutional prohibition. Nor does the fact that the Constitution provided for certain county officers, and authorized the Legislature to fix their compensation and that of other officials, affect the question. There is no necessary inability to give both of the provisions their exact and literal fulfillment.

In short, we conclude that article six aforesaid is "a limitation upon the power of the county to contract any and all indebtedness, including all such as that sued upon in this action;" and therefore, under the stipulation already set forth, the county is entitled to judgment.

Wherefore, the judgment of the Court below is reversed, and the case is remanded to that Court, with a direction to enter judgment for the defendant.

THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF LAKE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

BENJAMIN GRAHAM.

Municipal bonds—recitals, do not extend to matters of law—fact ascertainable by record—when recitals do not cover such fact—amount of assessed valuation—constitutional requirements cannot be dispensed with by the Legislature—legislative exactions.

1. The purchaser of municipal bonds is held to know the constitutional provisions and the statutory restrictions bearing on the question of the authority to issue them; also the recitals of the bonds he buys; while, on the other hand, if he acts in good faith and pay value, he is entitled to the protection of such recitals of facts as the bonds may contain.

2. Where the recitals of the bonds are merely to the effect that the statute has been fully complied with, and there is no recital that the constitutional requirements have been observed, there is no estoppel as to the constitutional question.

3. A recital does not extend to or cover matters of law; and a certificate reciting the actual facts, and that thereby the bonds were conformable to the law, when, judicially speaking, they are not, will not make them so, nor can it work an estoppel upon the county to claim the protection of the law.

4. If the fact necessary to the existence of the authority is by law to be ascertained, not officially by the officers charged with the execution of the power, but by reference to some express and definite record of a public character, then the authority to act will depend upon the existence of the requisite fact as shown by the record, and not upon its ascertainment and determination by anyone.

5. All persons claiming under the exercise of such a power may be put to proof of the fact made a condition of its lawfulness, notwithstanding any recitals in the instrument.

6. No recital as to the amount of the assessed taxable valuation of the property to be taxed for the payment of the bonds can take the place of the assessment itself, where the amount as fixed by reference to that record is made by the Constitution the standard for measuring the limit of the municipal power, and the ascertainment of that fact is not submitted to the county officers.

7. Where the standard of validity is created by the Constitution and in that standard two factors are to be considered, one the amount of assessed value, and the other the ratio between that assessed value and the debt proposed, these being exactions of the Constitution itself, it is not within the power of a Legislature to dispense with them, either directly or indirectly, by the creation of a ministerial commission whose finding shall be taken in lieu of the facts.

8. Where the Legislature, being the source of exaction, has created a board authorized to determine whether such exaction has been complied with, its finding is conclusive as to a bona fide purchaser.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a suit against a county in the State of Colorado to recover on coupons for interest on bonds issued by the county. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Daniel E. Parks and H. B. Johnson for plaintiff in error

Messrs. Robert E. Foot and Willard Teller for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Colorado.

It is a suit against the County of Lake, in that State, and is based on one hundred and ninety-eight coupons, aggregating the sum of $7,280, and being for interest on certain bonds issued by the county on the second of January, 1882.

The case was tried in the court below on an agreed statement of facts, which is in the bill of exceptions. From that agreement it appears that the bonds, from which the coupons sued on were detached, were executed in exchange for divers warrants of the county, to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars; that they were executed in compliance with an Act of the General Assembly of Colorado, entitled "An Act to Enable the Several Counties of the State to Fund their Floating Indebtedness;" that the indebtedness of the county on the 6th day of September, 1881, the day the first notice was published under the Act, as evidenced by county warrants, was $500,000, and the assesed valuation of the property of said county on said day was $16,423,403, afterwards rebated, in 1882, to $5,017,000, in accordance with a decision of the supreme court; and that such was the indebtedness and valuation on the day the bonds and coupons were issued.

There is also in the record an agreement between the parties that if section six of article eleven of the Constitution of the State of Colorado be construed to be a limitation upon the power of the defendant county to contract any and all indebtedness, including all such as that sued upon in this action, then it is admitted that the claimed indebtedness sued on herein was incurred after the limitation prescribed by said Constitution had been reached and exceeded by the said defendant, the County of Lake; and in the event of such a construction by the Circuit Court, or the Supreme Court of the United States, then and in that case, and for the purposes of the action, it is also admitted that the defendant is entitled to judgment thereon, unless the defendant is estopped from making such defense by the recitals contained on the face of the bonds and coupons sued on in this action.

NOTE.—Recitals in negotiable bonds or securities evidence of the facts recited. Estoppel by recitals in. See Mercer Co. v. Hackett, 68 U. S. 17 L. ed. 548 and note.

In the case of Commissioners of Lake County v. Rollins, ante, 1060, we have set forth said section 6, and have decided that it does impose "a limitation upon the power of the defendant county to contract any and all indebtedness." That decision disposes of the first condition in the agreement recited above, It only remains to decide whether the county is estopped from making such defense by the recitals contained on the face of such bonds and coupons. The bonds and coupons are as follows:

"No.——— $———.

"United States of America, County of Lake, State of Colorado.

Funding bond. Series ———

"The County of Lake, in the State of Colorado, acknowledges itself indebted and promises to pay to ——— ———, or bearer, ——— ——dollars, lawful money of the United States, for value received, redeemable at the pleasure of the said county, after ten years, and absolutely due and payable twenty years from the date hereof, at the office of the treasurer of the said county, in the City of Leadville, or at the banking house of Jesup, Paton & Co., in the City of New York, at the option of the holder, with interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, on the first day of January and the first day of July in each year, at the office of the county treasurer aforesaid, or at the banking house of Jesup, Paton & Co., in the City of New York, at the option of the holder, upon the presentation and surrender of the annexed coupons as they severally become due.

"This bond is one of 710 funding bonds, each of like date, comprised in three series, designated 'A,' 'B,' and 'C,' respectively, series 'A' consisting of 450 bonds for the sum of one thousand dollars each, numbered from 1 to 450, both numbers inclusive; series 'B' consisting of 60 bonds for the sum of five hundred dollars each, numbered from 451 to 510, both numbers inclusive; and series 'C' consisting of 200 bonds for the sum of one hundred dollars each, numbered from 511 to 710, both numbers inclusive, the whole amounting to five hundred thousand dollars, which the Board of County Commissioners of said Lake County have issued under and by virtue of and in full compliance with an Act of the General Assembly of the State of Colorado entitled 'An Act to Enable the Several Counties of the State to Fund Their Floating Indebtedness,' approved February 21, 1881; and it is hereby certified that all the provisions and requirements of said Act have been fully complied with by the proper officers in the issuing of this bond. It is further certified that this issue of bonds has been authorized by a vote of a majority of the duly qualified electors of said County of Lake, voting on the question at a general election duly held in said county on the 8th day of November, A. D. 1881.

"The faith and credit of the County of Lake are hereby pledged for the punctual payment of the principal and interest of this bond.

"In testimony whereof the Board of County Commissioners of the said County of Lake has caused this bond to be signed by its chairman, countersigned by the county treasurer, and attested by the county clerk, under the seal of the county, this second day of January, A. D. 1882.

"Attest:

"Chairman Board of County Commissioners."

Section one of the Act under which the bonds were issued is as follows:

"SEC. 1. It shall be the duty of the county commissioners of any county having a floating indebtedness exceeding ten thousand dollars, upon the petition of fifty of the electors of said counties (county) who shall have paid taxes upon property assessed to them in said county in the preceding year, to publish for the period of thirty days, in a newspaper within said county, a notice requesting the holders of the warrants of such county to submit, in writing, to the board of county commissioners, within thirty days from the date of the first publication of such notice, a statement of the amount of the warrants of such county which they will exchange, at par and accrued interest, for the bonds of such county, to be issued under the provisions of this Act, taking such bonds at par. It shall be the duty of such board of county commissioners, at the next general election occurring after the expiration of thirty days from the date of the first publication of the notice aforementioned, upon the petition of fifty of the electors of such county, who shall have paid taxes upon property assessed to them in said county in the preceding year, to submit to the vote of the qualified electors of such county, who shall have paid taxes on property assessed to them in said county in the preceding year, the question whether the board of county commissioners shall issue bonds of such county, under the provisions of this Act, in exchange, at par, for the warrants of such county, issued prior to the date of the first publication of the aforesaid notice; or they may submit such question at a special election, which they are hereby empowered to call for that purpose, at any time after the expiration of thirty days from the date of the first publication of the notice aforementioned, on the petition of fifty qualified electors as aforesaid; and they shall publish, for the period of at least thirty days immediately preceding such general or special election, in some newspaper published within such county, a notice that such question will be submitted to the duly qualified electors as aforesaid at such election. The county treasurer of such county shall make out and cause to be delivered to the judges of election, in each election precinct in the county, prior to the said election, a certified list of the taxpayers in such county who shall have paid taxes upon property assessed to them in such county in the preceding year; and no person shall vote upon the question of the funding of the county indebtedness unless his name shall appear upon such list, nor unless he shall have paid all county taxes assessed against him in such county in the preceding year. If a majority of the votes lawfully cast upon the question of such funding of the county indebtedness shall be for the funding of such indebtedness, the board of county commissioners may issue to any person or corporation holding any county warrant or warrants, issued prior to the date of the first publication of the aforementioned notice, coupon bonds of such county in exchange therefor at par. No bonds shall be issued of less denomination than one hundred dollars, and if issued for a greater amount, then for some multiple of that sum, and the rate of interest shall not exceed eight per cent per annum—the interest to be paid semi-annually, at the office of the county treasurer, or in the City of New York, at the option of the holders thereof. Such bonds to be payable at the pleasure of the county, after ten years from the date of their issuance, but absolutely due and payable twenty years after date of issue. The whole amount of bonds issued under this Act shall not exceed the sum of the county indebtedness at the date of the first publication of the aforementioned notice, and the amount shall be determined by the county commissioners, and a certificate made of the same, and made a part of the records of the county; and any bond issued in excess of said sum shall be null and void; and all bonds issued under the provisions of this Act shall be registered in the office of the state auditor, to whom a fee of ten cents shall be paid for recording each bond."

Nothing is better settled than this rule—that the purchaser of bonds, such as these, is held to know the constitutional provisions and the statutory restrictions bearing on the question of the authority to issue them; also the recitals of the bonds he buys; while, on the other hand, if he act in good faith and pay value, he is entitled to the protection of such recitals of facts as the bonds may contain.

In this case the Constitution charges each purchaser with knowledge of the fact that, as to all counties whose assessed valuation equals one million of dollars, there is a maximum limit beyond which those counties can incur no further indebtedness under any possible conditions, provided that, in calculating that limit, debts contracted before the adoption of the Constitution are not to be counted. The statute, on the other hand, charges the purchaser with knowledge of the fact that the county commissioners were to issue bonds at par in exchange for such warrants of the county as were themselves issued prior to the date of the first publication of the notice provided for; that the only limitation on the issue of bonds in the statute was that the bonds should not exceed in amount the sum of the county indebtedness on the day of notice aforesaid; that while the commissioners were empowered to determine the amount of such indebtedness, yet the statute does not refer that board, for the elements of its computation, to the Constitution or to the standards prescribed by the Constitution, but leaves it open to them, without departing from any direction of the statute, to adopt solely the basis of the county warrants. The recitals of the bonds were merely to the effect that the issue was "under and by virtue of, and in full compliance with," the statute; "that all the provisions and requirements of said Act have been fully complied with by the proper officers in the issuing of this bond;" and that the issuing was "authorized by a vote of a majority of the duly qualified electors," etc., no express reference being made to the Constitution, nor any statement made that the constitutional requirements had been observed.

There is, therefore, no estoppel as to the constitutional question, because there is no recital in regard to it. Carroll Co. v. Smith, 111 U. S. 556 [28: 517]. It is true, it might be said, that inasmuch as the bonds recite that all the requirements of the statute had been fully complied with by the proper officers, and inasmuch as one of those requirements was that the officers should determine the amount of the county debt, the inference is fair and reasonable that the statute meant only that they should count what was a just and actual debt, not claims that were void and therefore no debt; and that the recital made was in effect a statement that the whole matter had been examined by the board, and that they had issued bonds for only such warrants as were found to be issued in conformity to the law, the whole law—fundamental as well as statute. Waiving the question as to whether such a conclusion, persuasive as it might be in other aspects of a cause, is not too remote and indirect for the basis of an estoppel, the avowed object of which is to exclude from consideration the truth, still how could the case be any better for the defendant in error? Had the bond expressly stated that the board canvassed the debt and found the same to be binding and valid under the law and the Constitution, and that the same was $500,000, the recital would not be an estoppel. It must be remembered that these bonds show on their face an issue of $500,000. In the case of Dixon County v. Field, 111 U. S. 83, 92 [28: 360, 363], this court said:

"Recurring, then, to a consideration of the recitals in the bonds, we assume, for the purposes of this argument, that they are in legal effect equivalent to a representation, or warranty, or certificate on the part of the county officers, that everything necessary by law to be done has been done, and every fact necessary by law to have existed did exist, to make the bonds lawful and binding. Of course, this does not extend to or cover matters of law. All parties are equally bound to know the law; and a certificate reciting the actual facts, and that thereby the bonds were conformable to the law when, judicially speaking, they are not, will not make them so, nor can it work an estoppel upon the county to claim the protection of the law. Otherwise it would always be in the power of a municipal body to which power was denied to usurp the forbidden authority, by declaring that its assumption was within the law. This would be the clear exercise of legislative power, and would suppose such corporate bodies to be superior to the law itself."

Now, while it is true that the bonds show on their face an issue of $500,000, yet it is also true that neither the Constitution nor the statute, nor the bond, shows the amount of the valuation of the county; and it therefore might be said that, for this reason, and notwithstanding the purchaser's knowledge of the limit and his knowledge that $500,000 of debt was incurred, yet he might not have known that the limit had been exceeded, being ignorant of the other term in the calculation, that of the amount of the assessed values, and that the recital of conformity, misleading him, would operate as an estoppel.

This question is settled in the case of Dixon Co. v. Field, supra. The court there says, p. 93 [364]:

"If the fact necessary to the existence of the authority was by law to be ascertained, not officially by the officers charged with the execution of the power, but by reference to some express and definite record of a public character, then the true meaning of the law would be that the authority to act at all depended upon the actual objective existence of the requisite fact, as shown by the record, and not upon its ascertainment and determination by anyone; and the consequence would necessarily follow that all persons claiming under the exercise of such a power might be put to proof of the fact made a condition of its lawfulness, notwithstanding any recitals in the instrument." "The amount of the bonds issued was known. It is stated in the recital itself. It was $87,000. The holder of each bond was apprised of that fact. The amount of the assessed value of the taxable property in the county is not stated; but, ex vi termini, it was ascertainable in one way only, and that was by reference to the assessment itself, a public record equally accessible to all intending purchasers of bonds, as well as to the county officers. This being known, the ratio between the two amounts was fixed by an arithmetical calculation. No recital involving the amount of the assessed taxable valuation of the property to be taxed for the payment of the bonds can take the place of the assessment itself, for it is the amount as fixed by reference to that record that is made by the Constitution the standard for measuring the limit of the municipal power. Nothing in the way of inquiry, ascertainment or determination as to that fact is submitted to the county officers. They are bound, it is true, to learn from the assessment what the limit upon their authority is, as a necessary preliminary in the exercise of their functions and the performance of their duty; but the information is for themselves alone. All the world besides must have it from the same source, and for themselves. The fact, as it is recorded in the assessment itself, is extrinsic and proves itself by inspection, and concludes all determinations that contradict it."

To the suggestion that the purchaser was not chargeable with knowledge of the fact that the maximum of 12 mills on the dollar had been exceeded—for the $500,000 of debt ascertained to be due on the day of notice, and for which bonds were issued, might have been partly or wholly created before the Constitution was adopted, and therefore be excluded from the rule by the very terms of the Constitution itself—there are two decisive answers. First, the bill of exceptions shows that the debt was not so created either in whole or in part. Second, the defendant in error is not entitled to an estoppel even if such an inference might have been drawn from the recital of conformity. The cases just cited show that the records are the only source of information.

The question here is distinguishable from that in the cases relied on by counsel for defendant in error. In this case the standard of validity is created by the Constitution. In that standard two factors are to be considered; one the amount of assessed value, and the other the ratio between that assessed value and the debt proposed. These being exactions of the Constitution itself, it is not within the power of a Legislature to dispense with them, either directly or indirectly, by the creation of a ministerial commission whose finding shall be taken in lieu of the facts.

In the case of Sherman County v. Simons, 109 U. S. 735 [27: 1093], and others like it, the question was one of estoppel as against an exaction imposed by the Legislature; and the holding was that the Legislature, being the source of exaction, had created a board authorized to determine whether its exaction had been complied with, and that its finding was conclusive to a bona fide purchaser. So also in Oregon v. Jennings, 119 U. S. 74 [30: 323], the condition violated was not one imposed by the Constitution, but one fixed by the subscription contract of the people.

For these reasons, and under the stipulation above recited, the judgment of the Court below is reversed, and the case is remanded to that Court, with a direction to enter judgment for the defendant.

CHAE CHAN PING, Appt.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

"THE CHINESE EXCLUSION CASE,"

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 581-611)

Chinese laborers—Act prohibiting their entering the United States, valid—treaties are subject to Acts of Congress—treaty rights—Government may exclude aliens—sovereign powers.

1. The Act of Congress of October 1, 1888, prohibiting Chinese laborers from entering the United States who had departed before its passage, having a certificate issued under the Act of 1882 as amended by the Act of 1884 granting them permission to return, is valid.

2. Although the Act of 1888 is in contravention of express stipulations of the Treaty of 1868 and of the Supplemental Treaty of 1880, it is not on that account invalid or to be restricted in its enforcement.

3. Treaties are of no greater legal obligation than an Act of Congress, and are subject to such Acts as Congress may pass for their enforcement, modification, or repeal.

4. The question whether our Government is justified in disregarding its engagements with another nation is not one for the determination of the courts.

5. The Government of the United States, through the action of the legislative department, can exclude aliens from its territory, although no actual hostilities exist with the nation of which the aliens are subjects.

6. The power of exclusion of foreigners is an incident of sovereignty and the right to its exercise cannot be granted away or restrained on behalf of anyone.

Mr. Justice Field delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us on appeal from an order of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California refusing to release the appellant, on a writ of habeas corpus, from his alleged unlawful detention by Captain Walker, master of the steamship Belgic, lying within the Harbor of San Francisco. The appellant is a subject of the Emperor of China and a laborer by occupation. He resided at San Francisco, California, following his occupation, from some time in 1875 until June 2, 1887, when he left for China on the steamship Gaelic, having in his possession a certificate in terms entitling him to return to the United States bearing date on that day, duly issued to him by the Collector of Customs of the Port of San Francisco, pursuant to the provisions of section four of the Restriction Act of May 6, 1882, as amended by the Act of July 5, 1884. (22 Stat. at L. 59, chap. 126; 23 Stat. at L. 115, chap. 220.)

On the 7th of September, 1888, the appellant, on his return to California, sailed from Hong Kong in the steamship Belgic, which arrived within the Port of San Francisco on the 8th of October following. On his arrival he presented to the proper custom house officers his certificate and demanded permission to land. The collector of the port refused the permit, solely on the ground that under the Act of Congress, approved October 1, 1888, supplementary to the Restriction Acts of 1882 and 1884, the certificate had been annulled and his right to land abrogated, and he had been thereby forbidden again to enter the United States. (25 Stat. at L. 504, chap. 1064). The captain of the steamship, therefore, detained the appellant on board the steamer. Thereupon a petition on his behalf was presented to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, alleging that he was unlawfully restrained of his liberty, and praying that a writ of habeas corpus might be issued directed to the master of the steamship, commanding him to have the body of the appellant, with the cause of his detention, before the court at a time and place designated, to do and receive what might there be considered in the premises. A writ was accordingly issued, and in obedience to it the body of the appellant was produced before the court. Upon the hearing which followed, the court, after finding the facts substantially as stated, held as conclusions of law that the appellant was not entitled to enter the United States, and was not unlawfully restrained of his liberty, and ordered that he be remanded to the custody of the master of the steamship from which he had been taken under the writ. From this order an appeal was taken to this court.

The appeal involves a consideration of the validity of the Act of Congress of October 1, 1888, prohibiting Chinese laborers from entering the United States who had departed before its passage, having a certificate issued under the Act of 1882 as amended by the Act of 1884, granting them permission to return. The validity of the Act is assailed as being in effect an expulsion from the country of Chinese laborers in violation of existing treaties between the United States and the Government of China, and of rights vested in them under the laws of Congress.

It will serve to present with greater clearness the nature and force of the objections to the Act, if a brief statement be made of the general character of the treaties between the two countries and of the legislation of Congress to carry them into execution.

The first treaty between the United States and the Empire of China was concluded on the 3d of July, 1844, and ratified in December of the following year. (8 Stat. at L. 592.) Previous to that time there had been an extensive commerce between the two nations, that to China being confined to a single port. It was not, however, attended by any serious disturbances between our people there and the Chinese. In August, 1842, as the result of a war between England and China, a treaty was concluded stipulating for peace and friendship between them, and, among other things, that British subjects, with their families and establishments, should be allowed to reside for the purpose of carrying on mercantile pursuits at the five principal ports of the empire. (Hertslet's Commercial Treaties, Vol. 6, 221.) Actuated by a desire to establish by treaty friendly relations between the United States and the Chinese Empire, and to secure to our people the same commercial privileges which had been thus conceded to British subjects, Congress placed at the disposal of the President the means to enable him to establish future commercial relations between the two countries "on terms of national equal reciprocity." (Act of March, 1843, chap. 90, 5 Stat. at L. 624.) A mission was accordingly sent by him to China, at the head of which was placed Mr. Caleb Cushing, a gentleman of large experience in public affairs. He found the Chinese Government ready to concede by treaty to the United States all that had been reluctantly yielded to England through compulsion. As the result of his negotiations the Treaty of 1844 was concluded. It stipulated, among other things, that there should be a "perfect, permanent, and universal peace, and a sincere and cordial amity" between the two nations; that the five principal ports of the empire should be opened to the citizens of the United States, who should be permitted to reside with their families and trade there, and to proceed with their vessels and merchandise to and from any foreign port and either of said five ports; and while peaceably attending to their affairs should receive the protection of the Chinese authorities. (Senate Document No. 138, 28th Cong. 2d Sess.)

The Treaty between England and China did not have the effect of securing permanent peace and friendship between those countries. British subjects in China were often subjected not only to the violence of mobs, but to insults and outrages from local authorities of the country, which led to retaliatory measures for the punishment of the aggressors. To such an extent were these measures carried, and such resistance offered to them, that in 1856 the two countries were in open war. England then determined, with the co-operation of France, between which countries there seemed to be perfect accord, to secure from the Government of China, among other things, a recognition of the right of other powers to be represented there by accredited ministers, an extension of commercial intercourse with that country, and stipulations for religious freedom to all foreigners there, and for the suppression of piracy. England requested of the President the concurrence and active co-operation of the United States similar to that which France had accorded, and to authorize our naval and political authorities to act in concert with the allied forces. As this proposition involved a participation in existing hostilities, the request could not be acceded to, and the Secretary of State in his communication to the English Government explained that the war-making power of the United States was not vested in the President but in Congress, and that he had no authority, therefore, to order aggressive hostilities to be undertaken. But as the rights of citizens of the United States might be seriously affected by the results of existing hostilities, and commercial intercourse between the United States and China be disturbed, it was deemed advisable to send to China a minister plenipotentiary to represent our Government and watch our interests there. Accordingly, Mr. William B. Reed of Philadelphia was appointed such minister, and instructed, whilst abstaining from any direct interference, to aid by peaceful co-operation the objects the allied forces were seeking to accomplish. (Senate Document No. 47, 35th Cong. 1st Sess.) Through him a new treaty was negotiated with the Chinese Government. It was concluded in June, 1858, and ratified in August of the following year. (12 Stat. at L. 1023.) It reiterated the pledges of peace and friendship between the two nations, renewed the promise of protection to all citizens of the United States in China peaceably attending to their affairs, and stipulated for security to Christians in the profession of their religion. Neither the Treaty of 1844 nor that that of 1858 touched upon the migration and emigration of the citizens and subjects of the two nations respectively from one country to the other. But in 1868 a great change in the relations of the two nations was made in that respect. In that year a mission from China, composed of distinguished functionaries of that empire, came to the United States with the professed object of establishing closer relations between the two countries and their peoples. At its head was placed Mr. Anson Burlingame, an eminent citizen of the United States, who had at one time represented this country as commissioner to China. He resigned his office under our Government to accept the position tendered to him by the Chinese Government. The mission was hailed in the United States as the harbinger of a new era in the history of China—as the opening up to free intercourse with other nations and peoples a country that for ages had been isolated and closed against foreigners, who were allowed to have intercourse and to trade with the Chinese only at a few designated places; and the belief was general and confidently expressed, that great benefits would follow to the world generally and especially to the United States. On its arrival in Washington, additional articles to the Treaty of 1858 were agreed upon, which gave expression to the general desire that the two nations and their peoples should be drawn closer together. The new articles, eight in number, were agreed to on the 28th of July, 1868, and ratifications of them were exchanged at Pekin in November of the following year. (16 Stat. at L. 739.) Of these articles the 5th, 6th and 7th are as follows:

"ARTICLE 5. The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from the one country to the other for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties, therefore, join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any other foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

"ARTICLE 6. Citizens of the United States visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities or exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States.

"ARTICLE. 7. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy all the privileges of the public educational institutions under the control of the Government of China; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects shall enjoy all the privileges of the public educational institutions under the control of the Government of the United States, which are enjoyed in the respective countries by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. The citizens of the United States may freely establish and maintain schools within the Empire of China at those places where foreigners are by treaty permitted to reside; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects may enjoy the same privileges and immunities in the United States."

But notwithstanding these strong expressions of friendship and good will, and the desire they evince for free intercourse, events were transpiring on the Pacific Coast which soon dissipated the anticipations indulged as to the benefits to follow the immigration of Chinese to this country. The previous Treaties of 1844 and 1858 were confined principally to mutual declarations of peace and friendship and to stipulations for commercial intercourse at certain ports in China and for protection to our citizens whilst peaceably attending to their affairs. It was not until the additional articles of 1868 were adopted that any public declaration was made by the two nations that there were advantages in the free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from one country to the other; and stipulations given that each should enjoy in the country of the other, with respect to travel or residence, the "privileges, immunities, and exemptions" enjoyed by citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. Whatever modifications have since been made to these general provisions have been caused by a well founded apprehension—from the experience of years—that a limitation to the immigration of certain classes from China was essential to the peace of the community on the Pacific Coast, and possibly to the preservation of our civilization there. A few words on this point may not be deemed inappropriate here, they being confined to matters of public notoriety, which have frequently been brought to the attention of Congress. Report of Committee of H. R. No. 872, 46th Cong. 2d Sess.

The discovery of gold in California in 1848, as is well known, was followed by a large immigration thither from all parts of the world, attracted not only by the hope of gain from the mines but from the great prices paid for all kinds of labor. The news of the discovery penetrated China, and laborers came from there in great numbers, a few with their own means, but by far the greater number under contract with employers, for whose benefit they worked. These laborers readily secured employment, and, as domestic servants, and in various kinds of out-door work, proved to be exceedingly useful. For some years little opposition was made to them except when they sought to work in the mines; but, as their numbers increased, they began to engage in various mechanical pursuits and trades, and thus came in competition with our artisans and mechanics, as well as our laborers in the field.

The competition steadily increased as the laborers came in crowds on each steamer that arrived from China, or Hong Kong, an adjacent English port. They were generally industrious and frugal. Not being accompanied by families, except in rare instances, their expenses were small; and they were content with the simplest fare, such as would not suffice for our laborers and artisans. The competition between them and our people was for this reason altogether in their favor, and the consequent irritation, proportionately deep and bitter, was followed, in many cases, by open conflicts, to the great disturbance of the public peace.

The differences of race added greatly to the difficulties of the situation. Notwithstanding the favorable provisions of the new articles of the Treaty of 1868, by which all the privileges, immunities, and exemptions were extended to subjects of China in the United States which were accorded to citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, they remained strangers in the land, residing apart by themselves, and adhering to the customs and usages of their own country. It seems impossible for them to assimilate with our people or to make any change in their habits or modes of living. As they grew in numbers each year the people of the coast saw, or believed they saw, in the facility of immigration, and in the crowded millions of China, where population presses upon the means of subsistence, great danger that at no distant day that portion of our country would be overrun by them unless prompt action was taken to restrict their immigration. The people there accordingly petitioned earnestly for protective legislation.

In December, 1878, the convention which framed the present Constitution of California, being in session, took this subject up, and memorialized Congress upon it, setting forth, in substance, that the presence of Chinese laborers had a baneful effect upon the material interests of the State, and upon public morals; that their immigration was in numbers approaching the character of an Oriental invasion, and was a menace to our civilization; that the discontent from this cause was not confined to any political party, or to any class or nationality, but was well nigh universal; that they retained the habits and customs of their own country, and in fact constituted a Chinese settlement within the State, without any interest in our country or its institutions; and praying Congress to take measures to prevent their further immigration. This memorial was presented to Congress in February, 1879.

So urgent and constant were the prayers for relief against existing and anticipated evils, both from the public authorities of the Pacific Coast and from private individuals, that Congress was impelled to act on the subject. Many persons, however, both in and out of Congress, were of opinion that so long as the treaty remained unmodified, legislation restricting immigration would be a breach of faith with China. A statute was accordingly passed appropriating money to send commissioners to China to act with our minister there in negotiating and concluding by treaty a settlement of such matters of interest between the two Governments as might be confided to them. (21 Stat. at L. 133, chap. 88.) Such commissioners were appointed, and as the result of their negotiations the Supplementary Treaty of November 17, 1880, was concluded and ratified in May of the following year. (22 Stat. at L. 826.) It declares in the first article that "Whenever, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse." In its second article it declares that "Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation."

The Government of China thus agreed that notwithstanding the stipulations of former treaties, the United States might regulate, limit, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers, or their residence therein, without absolutely forbidding it, whenever in their opinion the interests of the country, or of any part of it, might require such action. Legislation for such regulation, limitation, or suspension was intrusted to the discretion of our Government, with the condition that it should only be such as might be necessary for that purpose, and that the immigrants should not be maltreated or abused. On the 6th of May, 1882, an Act of Congress was approved, to carry this supplementary treaty into effect. (22 Stat. at L. 58, chap. 126.) It is entitled "An Act to Execute Certain Treaty Stipulations Relating to Chinese." Its first section declares that after ninety days from the passage of the Act, and for the period of ten years from its date, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States is suspended, and that it shall be unlawful for any such laborer to come, or, having come, to remain within the United States. The second, makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine, to which imprisonment may be added, for the master of any vessel knowingly to bring within the United States from a foreign country, and land, any such Chinese laborer. The third provides that those two sections shall not apply to Chinese laborers who were in the United States November 17, 1880, or who should come within ninety days after the passage of the Act. The fourth declares that, for the purpose of identifying the laborers who were here on the 17th of November, 1880, or who should come within the ninety days mentioned, and to furnish them with "the proper evidence" of their right to go from and come to the United States, the "collector of customs of the district from which any such Chinese laborer shall depart from the United States shall, in person or by deputy, go on board each vessel having on board any such Chinese laborer and cleared or about to sail from his district for a foreign port, and on such vessel make a list of all such Chinese laborers, which shall be entered in registry books to be kept for that purpose, in which shall be stated the name, age, occupation, last place of residence, physical marks or peculiarities, and all facts necessary for the identification of each of such Chinese laborers, which books shall be safely kept in the custom-house;" and each laborer thus departing shall be entitled to receive, from the collector or his deputy, a certificate containing such particulars, corresponding with the registry, as may serve to identify him. "The certificate herein provided for," says the section, "shall entitle the Chinese laborer to whom the same is issued to return to and re-enter the United States upon producing and delivering the same to the collector of customs at the district at which such Chinese laborer shall seek to re-enter."

The enforcement of this Act with respect to laborers who were in the United States on November 17, 1880, was attended with great embarrassment, from the suspicious nature, in many instances, of the testimony offered to establish the residence of the parties, arising from the loose notions entertained by the witnesses of the obligation of an oath. This fact led to a desire for further legislation restricting the evidence receivable, and the Amendatory Act of July 5, 1884, was accordingly passed. (23 Stat. at L. 45, chap. 220.) The Committee of the House of Representatives on Foreign Affairs, to whom the original bill was referred, in reporting it, recommending its passage, stated that there had been such manifold evasions, as well as attempted evasions, of the Act of 1882 that it had failed to meet the demands which called it into existence. (Report in H. R. No. 614, 48th Cong. 1st Sess.) To obviate the difficulties attending its enforcement the Amendatory Act of 1884 declared that the certificate which the laborer must obtain "shall be the only evidence permissible to establish his right of re-entry" into the United States.

This Act was held by this court not to require the certificate from laborers who were in the United States on the 17th of November, 1880, who had departed out of the country before May 6, 1882, and remained out until after July 5, 1884. Chew Heong v. United States, 112 U. S. 536 [28:770]. The same difficulties and embarrassments continued with respect to the proof of their former residence. Parties were able to pass successfully the required examination as to their residence before November 17, 1880, who, it was generally believed, had never visited our shores. To prevent the possibility of the policy of excluding Chinese laborers being evaded, the Act of October 1, 1888, the validity of which is the subject of consideration in this case, was passed. It is entitled "An Act a Supplement to an Act Entitled 'An Act to Execute Certain Treaty Stipulations Relating to Chinese,' Approved the Sixth Day of May, Eighteen Hundred and Eighty Two." (25 Stat. at L. 504, chap. 1064.) It is as follows:

"Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this Act, it shall be unlawful for any Chinese laborer who shall at any time heretofore have been, or who may now or hereafter be, a resident within the United States, and who shall have departed, or shall depart, therefrom, and shall not have returned before the passage of this Act to return to, or remain in, the United States.

"SEC. 2. That no certificates of identity provided for in the fourth and fifth sections of the Act to which this is a supplement shall hereafter be issued; and every certificate heretofore issued in pursuance thereof is hereby declared void and of no effect, and the Chinese laborer claiming admission by virtue thereof shall not be permitted to enter the United States.

"SEC. 3. That all the duties prescribed, liabilities, penalties, and forfeitures imposed, and the powers conferred by the second, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth sections of the Act to which this is a supplement, are hereby extended and made applicable to the provisions of this Act.

"SEC. 4. That all such part or parts of the Act to which this is a supplement as are inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

"Approved October 1, 1888."

The validity of this Act, as already mentioned, is assailed, as being in effect an expulsion from the country of Chinese laborers in violation of existing treaties between the United States and the Government of China, and of rights vested in them under the laws of Congress. The objection that the Act is in conflict with the treaties was earnestly pressed in the court below, and the answer to it constitutes the principal part of its opinion. (36 Fed. Rep. 431.) Here the objection made is, that the Act of 1888 impairs a right vested under the Treaty of 1880, as a law of the United States, and the Statutes of 1882 and of 1884 passed in execution of it. It must be conceded that the Act of 1888 is in contravention of express stipulations of the Treaty of 1868 and of the Supplemental Treaty of 1880, but it is not on that account invalid or to be restricted in its enforcement. The treaties were of no greater legal obligation than the Act of Congress. By the Constitution, laws made in pursuance thereof and treaties made under the authority of the United States are both declared to be the supreme law of the land, and no paramount authority is given to one over the other. A treaty, it is true, is in its nature a contract between nations, and is often merely promissory in its character, requiring legislation to carry its stipulations into effect. Such legislation will be open to future repeal or amendment. If the treaty operates by its own force, and relates to a subject within the power of Congress, it can be deemed in that particular only the equivalent of a legislative Act, to be repealed or modified at the pleasure of Congress. In either case the last expression of the sovereign will must control.

The effect of legislation upon conflicting treaty stipulations was elaborately considered in The Head-Money Cases, and it was there adjudged "that so far as a treaty made by the United States by any foreign nation can become the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such Acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification or repeal." 112 U. S. 580, 599 [28: 798, 804]. This doctrine was affirmed and followed in Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 195 [31: 386, 388]. It will not be presumed that the legislative department of the Government will lightly pass laws which are in conflict with the treaties of the country; but that circumstances may arise which would not only justify the Government in disregarding their stipulations, but demand in the interests of the country that it should do so, there can be no question. Unexpected events may call for a change in the policy of the country. Neglect or violation of stipulations on the part of the other contracting party may require corresponding action on our part. When a reciprocal engagement is not carried out by one of the contracting parties, the other may also decline to keep the corresponding engagement. In 1798 the conduct towards this country of the Government of France was of such a character that Congress declared that the United States were freed and exonerated from the stipulations of previous treaties with that country. Its Act on the subject was as follows:

"An Act to Declare the Treaties Heretofore Concluded with France No Longer Obligatory on the United States.

"Whereas, the treaties concluded between the United States and France have been repeatedly violated on the part of the French Government; and the just claims of the United States for reparation of the injuries so committed have been refused, and their attempts to negotiate an amicable adjustment of all complaints between the two nations have been repelled with indignity; And whereas, under authority of the French Government, there is yet pursued against the United States a system of predatory violence, infracting the said treaties and hostile to the rights of a free and independent nation:

"Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States are of right freed and exonerated from the stipulations of the treaties and of the consular convention heretofore concluded between the United States and France; and that the same shall not henceforth be regarded as legally obligatory on the Government or citizens of the United States." (1 Stat. at L. 578.)

This Act, as seen, applied in terms only to the future. Of course, whatever of a permanent character had been executed or vested under the treaties was not affected by it. In that respect the abrogation of the obligations of a treaty operates, like the repeal of a law, only upon the future, leaving transactions executed under it to stand unaffected. The validity of this legislative release from the stipulations of the treaties was of course not a matter for judicial cognizance. The question whether our Government is justified in disregarding its engagements with another nation is not one for the determination of the courts. This subject was fully considered by Mr. Justice Curtis, whilst sitting at the circuit, in Taylor v. Morton, 2 Curtis, 454, 459; and he held that whilst it would always be a matter of the utmost gravity and delicacy to refuse to execute a treaty, the power to do so was prerogative, of which no nation could be deprived without deeply affecting its independence; but whether a treaty with a foreign Sovereign had been violated by him, whether the consideration of a particular stipulation of a treaty had been voluntarily withdrawn by one party so as to no longer be obligatory upon the other, and whether the views and acts of a foreign Sovereign, manifested through his representative, had given just occasion to the political departments of our Government to withhold the execution of a promise contained in a treaty, or to act in direct contravention of such promise, were not judicial questions; that the power to determine them has not been confided to the judiciary, which has no suitable means to execute it, but to the executive and legislative departments of the Government; and that it belongs to diplomacy and legislation, and not to the administration of existing laws. And the learned Justice added, as a necessary consequence of these conclusions, that if Congress has this power, it is wholly immaterial to inquire whether it has, by the statute complained of, departed from the treaty or not; or, if it has, whether such departure was accidental or designed; and if the latter, whether the reasons therefor were good or bad. These views were reasserted and fully adopted by this court in Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 195 [31: 386, 388]. And we may add to the concluding observation of the learned Justice, that if the power mentioned is vested in Congress, any reflection upon its motives, or the motives of any of its members in exercising it, would be entirely uncalled for. This court is not a censor of the morals of other departments of the Government; it is not invested with any authority to pass judgment upon the motives of their conduct. When once it is established that Congress possesses the power to pass an Act, our province ends with its construction and its application to cases as they are presented for determination. Congress has the power under the Constitution to declare war, and in two instances where the power has been exercised—in the war of 1812 against Great Britain, and in 1846 against Mexico—the propriety and wisdom and justice of its action were vehemently assailed by some of the ablest and best men in the country, but no one doubted the legality of the proceeding; and any imputation by this or any other court of the United States upon the motives of the members of Congress who in either case voted for the declaration, would have been justly the cause of animadversion. We do not mean to intimate that the moral aspects of legislative Acts may not be proper subjects of consideration. Undoubtedly they may be, at proper times and places, before the public, in the halls of Congress, and in all the modes by which the public mind can be influenced. Public opinion, thus enlightened, brought to bear upon legislation, will do more than all other causes to prevent abuses; but the province of the courts is to pass upon the validity of laws, not to make them, and when their validity is established, to declare their meaning and apply their provisions. All else lies beyond their domain.

There being nothing in the Treaties between China and the United States to impair the validity of the Act of Congress of October 1, 1888, was it on any other ground beyond the competency of Congress to pass it? If so, it must be because it was not within the power of Congress to prohibit Chinese laborers who had at the time departed from the United States, or should subsequently depart, from returning to the United States. Those laborers are not citizens of the United States; they are aliens. That the Government of the United States, through the action of the legislative department, can exclude aliens from its territory is a proposition which we do not think open to controversy. Jurisdiction over its own territory to that extent is an incident of every independent nation. It is a part of its independence. If it could not exclude aliens it would be to that extent subject to the control of another power. As said by this court in the case of The Exchange v. McFaddon, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 116, 136 [3: 287], speaking by Chief Justice Marshall: "The jurisdiction of the nation within its own territory is necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it, deriving validity from an external source, would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction, and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in that power which could impose such restriction. All exceptions, therefore, to the full and complete power of a nation within its own territories must be traced up to the consent of the nation itself. They can flow from no other legitimate source."

While under our Constitution and form of government the great mass of local matters is controlled by local authorities, the United States, in their relation to foreign countries and their subjects or citizens are one nation, invested with powers which belong to independent nations, the exercise of which can be invoked for the maintenance of its absolute independence and security throughout its entire territory. The powers to declare war, make treaties, suppress insurrection, repel invasion, regulate foreign commerce, secure republican governments to the States, and admit subjects of other nations to citizenship, are all sovereign powers, restricted in their exercise only by the Constitution itself and considerations of public policy and justice which control, more or less, the conduct of all civilized nations. As said by this court, in the case of Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U. S. 6 Wheat. 264, 413 [5: 257], speaking by the same great Chief Justice: "That the United States form, for many, and for most important purposes, a single nation, has not yet been denied. In war, we are one people. In making peace, we are one people. In all commercial regulations, we are one and the same people. In many other respects, the American people are one; and the Government which is alone capable of controlling and managing their interests in all these respects, is the government of the Union. It is their Government, and in that character they have no other. America has chosen to be in many respects, and to many purposes, a nation; and for all these purposes her government is complete; to all these objects, it is competent. The people have declared that in the exercise of all powers given for these objects it is supreme. It can, then, in effecting these objects, legitimately control all individuals or governments within the American territory. The Constitution and laws of a State, so far as they are repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, are absolutely void. These States are constituent parts of the United States. They are members of one great empire—for some purposes sovereign, for some purposes subordinate." The same view is expressed in a different form by Mr. Justice Bradley, in Knox v. Lee, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 457, 555 [20: 287, 313], where he observes that "The United States is not only a Government, but it is a national Government, and the only Government in this country that has the character of nationality. It is invested with power over all the foreign relations of the country, war, peace and negotiations and intercourse with other nations; all which are forbidden to the state governments. It has jurisdiction over all those general subjects of legislation and sovereignty which affect the interests of the whole people equally and alike, and which require uniformity of regulations and laws, such as the coinage, weights and measures, bankruptcy, the postal system, patent and copyright laws, the public lands, and interstate commerce; all which subjects are expressly or impliedly prohibited to the state governments. It has power to suppress insurrections, as well as to repel invasions, and to organize, arm, discipline and call into service the militia of the whole country. The President is charged with the duty and invested with the power to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. The judiciary has jurisdiction to decide controversies between the States, and between their respective citizens, as well as questions of national concern; and the Government is clothed with power to guarantee to every State a republican form of government, and to protect each of them against invasion and domestic violence."

The control of local matters being left to local authorities, and national matters being intrusted to the Government of the Union, the problem of free institutions existing over a widely extended country, having different climates and varied interests, has been happily solved. For local interests the several States of the Union exist, but for national purposes, embracing our relations with foreign nations, we are but one people, one nation, one power.

To preserve its independence, and give security against foreign aggression and encroachment, is the highest duty of every nation, and to attain these ends nearly all other considerations are to be subordinated. It matters not in what form such aggression and encroachment come, whether from the foreign nation acting in its national character or from vast hordes of its people crowding in upon us. The Government, possessing the powers which are to be exercised for protection and security, is clothed with authority to determine the occasion on which the powers shall be called forth; and its determination, so far as the subjects affected are concerned, are necessarily conclusive upon all its departments and officers. If, therefore, the Government of the United States, through its legislative department, considers the presence of foreigners of a different race in this country, who will not assimilate with us, to be dangerous to its peace and security, their exclusion is not to be stayed because at the time there are no actual hostilities with the nation of which the foreigners are subjects. The existence of war would render the necessity of the proceeding only more obvious and pressing. The same necessity, in a less pressing degree, may arise when war does not exist, and the same authority which adjudges the necessity in one case must also determine it in the other. In both cases its determination is conclusive upon the judiciary. If the Government of the country of which the foreigners excluded are subjects is dissatisfied with this action, it can make complaint to the executive head of our Government, or resort to any other measure which, in its judgment, its interests or dignity may demand; and there lies its only remedy.

The power of the Government to exclude foreigners from the country whenever, in its judgment, the public interests require such exclusion, has been asserted in repeated instances, and never denied by the executive or legislative departments. In a communication made in December, 1852, to Mr. A. Dudley Mann, at one time a special agent of the Department of State in Europe, Mr. Everett, then Secretary of State under President Fillmore, writes: "This Government could never give up the right of excluding foreigners whose presence it might deem a source of danger to the United States." "Nor will this Government consider such exclusion of American citizens from Russia necessarily a matter of diplomatic complaint to that country." In a dispatch to Mr. Fay, our minister to Switzerland, in March, 1856, Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, under President Pierce, writes: "Every society possesses the undoubted right to determine who shall compose its members, and it is exercised by all nations, both in peace and war." "It may always be questionable whether a resort to this power is warranted by the circumstances, or what department of the Government is empowered to exert it; but there can be no doubt that it is possessed by all nations, and that each may decide for itself when the occasion arises demanding its exercise." In a communication in September, 1869, to Mr. Washburne, our minister to France, Mr. Fish, Secretary of State under President Grant, uses this language: "The control of the people within its limits, and the right to expel from its territory persons who are dangerous to the peace of the State, are too clearly within the essential attributes of sovereignty to be seriously contested. Strangers visiting or sojourning in a foreign country voluntarily submit themselves to its laws and customs; and the municipal laws of France, authorizing the expulsion of strangers, are not of such recent date, nor has the exercise of the power by the Government of France been so infrequent, that sojourners within her territory can claim surprise when the power is put in force." In a communication to Mr. Foster, our minister to Mexico, in July, 1879, Mr. Evarts, Secretary of State under President Hayes, referring to the power vested in the Constitution of Mexico to expel objectionable foreigners, says: "The admission that, as that Constitution now stands and is interpreted, foreigners who render themselves harmful or objectionable to the General Government must expect to be liable to the exercise of the power adverted to, even in time of peace, remains, and no good reason is seen for departing from that conclusion now. But, while there may be no expedient basis on which to found objection, on principle and in advance of a special case thereunder, to the constitutional right thus asserted by Mexico, yet the manner of carrying out such asserted right may be highly objectionable. You would be fully justified in making earnest remonstrances should a citizen of the United States be expelled from Mexican territory without just steps to assure the grounds of such expulsion, and in bringing the fact to the immediate knowledge of the Department." In a communication to Mr. W. J. Stillman, under date of August 3, 1882, Mr. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State under President Arthur, writes: "This Government cannot contest the right of foreign Governments to exclude, on police, or other grounds, American citizens from their shores." (Wharton's Int. Law Dig. § 206.)

The exclusion of paupers, criminals and persons afflicted with incurable diseases, for which statutes have been passed, is only an application of the same power to particular classes of persons whose presence is deemed injurious or a source of danger to the country. As applied to them, there has never been any question as to the power to exclude them. The power is constantly exercised; its existence is involved in the right of self-preservation. As to paupers, it makes no difference by whose aid they are brought to the country. As Mr. Fish, when Secretary of State, wrote in a communication under date of December 26, 1872, to Mr. James Moulding, of Liverpool, the Government of the United States "is not willing and will not consent to receive the pauper class of any community who may be sent or may be assisted in their immigration at the expense of Government or of municipal authorities." As to criminals, the power of exclusion has always been exercised, even in the absence of any statute on the subject. In a dispatch to Mr. Cramer, our minister to Switzerland, in December, 1881, Mr. Blaine, Secretary of State under President Arthur, writes: "While, under the Constitution and the laws, this country is open to the honest and the industrious immigrant, it has no room outside of its prisons or almshouses for depraved and incorrigible criminals or hopelessly dependent paupers who may have become a pest or burden, or both, to their own country." (Wharton's Int. Law Dig. supra.)

The power of exclusion of foreigners being an incident of sovereignty belonging to the Government of the United States, as a part of those sovereign powers delegated by the Constitution, the right to its exercise at any time when, in the judgment of the Government, the interests of the country require it, cannot be granted away or restrained on behalf of anyone. The powers of Government are delegated in trust to the United States, and are incapable of transfer to any other parties. They cannot be abandoned or surrendered. Nor can their exercise be hampered, when needed for the public good, by any considerations of private interest. The exercise of these public trusts is not the subject of barter or contract. Whatever license, therefore, Chinese laborers may have obtained previous to the Act of October 1, 1888, to return to the United States after their departure, is held at the will of the Government, revocable at any time, at its pleasure. Whether a proper consideration by our Government of its previous laws, or a proper respect for the nation whose subjects are affected by its action, ought to have qualified its inhibition and made it applicable only to persons departing from the country after the passage of the Act, are not questions for judicial determination. If there be any just ground of complaint on the part of China, it must be made to the political department of our Government, which is alone competent to act upon the subject. The rights and interests created by a treaty, which have become so vested that its expiration or abrogation will not destroy or impair them, are such as are connected with and lie in property capable of sale and transfer, or other disposition, not such as are personal and untransferable in their character. Thus, in The Head-Money Cases, the court speaks of certain rights being in some instances conferred upon the citizens or subjects of one nation residing in the territorial limits of the other, which are "capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country." "An illustration of this character," it adds, "is found in treaties which regulate the mutual rights of citizens and subjects of the contracting nations in regard to rights of property by descent or inheritance when the individuals concerned are aliens." 112 U. S. 580, 598 [28: 798, 803]. The passage cited by counsel from the language of Mr. Justice Washington in Society for the Propogation of the Gospel v. New Haven, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 464, 493 [5: 662], also illustrates this doctrine. There the learned Justice observes that "If real estate be purchased or secured under a treaty, it would be most mischievous to admit that the extinguishment of the treaty extinguished the right to such estate. In truth, it no more affects such rights than the repeal of a municipal law affects rights acquired under it." Of this doctrine there can be no question in this court; but far different is this case, where a continued suspension of the exercise of a governmental power is insisted upon as a right, because, by the favor and consent of the Government, it has not heretofore been exerted with respect to the appellant or to the class to which he belongs. Between property rights not affected by the termination or abrogation of a treaty and expectations of benefits from the continuance of existing legislation there is as wide a difference as between realization and hopes.

During the argument reference was made by counsel to the Alien Law of June 25, 1798, and to opinions expressed at the time by men of great ability and learning against its constitutionality. (1 Stat. at L. 570, chap. 58.) We do not attach importance to those opinions in their bearing upon this case. The Act vested in the President power to order all such aliens as he should judge dangerous to the peace and safety of the United States, or should have reasonable grounds to suspect were concerned in any treasonable or secret machination against the Government, to depart out of the territory of the United States within such time as should be expressed in his order. There were other provisions also distinguishing it from the Act under consideration. The Act was passed during a period of great political excitement, and it was attacked and defended with great zeal and ability. It is enough, however, to say that it is entirely different from the Act before us, and the validity of its provisions was never brought to the test of judicial decision in the courts of the United States.

SARAH M. JONES, Appt.,
v.
MATILDA A. VAN DOREN ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 684-693.)

Amendment to pleading—trustee, who is—grantee, when is trustee—equity jurisdiction—dower interest obtained by fraud—prayer for general relief, effect of—Statute of Limitations as to fraud.

1. If the amendment to the pleadings is one which the court, in the exercise of its discretion, might properly allow, a motion to strike the amended pleading from the files should be denied.

2. One who by fraudulent misrepresentations obtains a conveyance from the owner of any interest in property, real or personal, is in equity a trustee ex maleficio for the person defrauded; and anyone taking the property from such trustee with notice of the fraud and of the consequent trust is affected by the trust.

3. When a trustee, dealing with the trust property together with property of his own, as one mass, conveys part of the whole to a purchaser who takes it for value, in good faith, without notice of the fraud or of the trust, and who therefore acquires a good title, the question how far the rest of the property shall be charged with the trust so as fully to indemnify the person defrauded, can only be determined in a court of equity.

4. Where one defendant obtained a conveyance of the plaintiff's dower interest by fraud, and held that interest in trust for her, a codefendant, taking the property with full notice, is equally affected by the fraud and bound by the trust.

5. Where the prayer of the bill is chiefly directed towards securing a right to redeem the whole property by paying off the whole mortgage, but the general object of the bill is to secure to the plaintiff the dower interest of which she has been defrauded, and the bill contains a prayer for general relief, this is sufficient to enable a court of equity to decree such relief as the facts stated in the bill justify.

6. Where the plaintiff is not suing for her dower as such, the right to which accrued over twenty years before commencing the suit, but for property of which she has been defrauded, the Statute of Limitations begins to run only from the discovery of the fraud.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota, dismissing, on demurrer, a suit to redeem a mortgage and for a reconveyance of land, in order to obtain plaintiff's dower interest therein. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was a bill in equity filed May 18, 1888, by Sarah M. Jones, a citizen of Pennsylvania, against Matilda A. Van Doren, a citizen of Indiana, and Samuel J. Jones and Samuel J. Glover, citizens of Illinois.

The original bill alleged that Robert H. Jones died intestate in April, 1863, leaving the plaintiff, his widow, and the defendant, Jones, his son and only heir at law, and seised in fee of one fourth undivided part of certain land described, in Minnesota; that the plaintiff became entitled to a dower interest therein, which by the laws of Minnesota was a life estate in one third part, and the son became vested with the title in fee, subject to her dower interest; that she, being informed that the estate was involved in litigation and having little or no knowledge of business, and at his request, for no consideration, and merely for the purpose of facilitating the conduct of the litigation, made a quitclaim deed of her interest to him, and that he accepted the deed upon the express understanding and agreement to receive it for that purpose only.

The bill further set forth, as the result of the litigation, that certain described parcels of the land were set off to him in severalty; and alleged that he, conspiring and confederating with the defendant Matilda A. Van Doren (who was fully advised of all the facts above alleged) to defraud the plaintiff of her dower estate, made a mortgage by a conveyance in trust to the defendant Glover, on July 25, 1871, of all the land so set off, including the plaintiff's interest therein, to secure a sum of $10,000 lent to him by Mrs. Van Doren; that, as part of the conspiracy, a suit for foreclosure was begun in the name of Glover on August 26, 1876, and a decree obtained therein, under which all the land was sold, and (except a small portion purchased by one Galusha) bought by Mrs. Van Doren for the sum of $8,745.14, and a final decree, vesting title in the purchasers, was entered on May 22, 1880; that the plaintiff was ignorant of the mortgage and of the foreclosure suit until long after the final decree therein; that on December 16, 1876, in order to protect her dower right, she paid $1,808.48 in discharge of taxes on the land, of which payment the defendants availed themselves; and that Mrs. Van Doren, in 1881, sold a portion of the land to one Marshall, a bona fide purchaser, for the sum of $10,000, which she received and applied to her own use, and still held the rest of the land.

The plaintiff further alleged that before filing her bill she demanded an account of Mrs. Van Doren, and offered to pay her all moneys paid or expended by her on or about the land, with interest, in redemption of the mortgage, and demanded a reconveyance, but she refused; and that the plaintiff was ready and willing to pay to her all sums of money, and to do all other acts that might be adjudged by the court necessary to redeem the land from the mortgage and foreclosure.

The bill prayed for an account, and that the plaintiff, on paying to Mrs. Van Doren such sums as the court might direct to enable her to redeem the mortgage, should be adjudged to be entitled to redemption, and Mrs. Van Doren might be ordered to reconvey the land still held by her, and for such other or different relief as the nature of the case might require and as might be agreeable to equity.

A demurrer to that bill was sustained and the bill dismissed, on the ground that the plaintiff, having conveyed her interest by a deed absolute on its face, the Statute of Frauds would not permit her to set up an oral trust, and, as no fraud, accident or mistake in making that deed was alleged, no trust arose by implication of law. 18 Fed. Rep. 619.

The bill was then amended by substituting, for the allegations concerning the plaintiff's conveyance to the defendant Jones, allegations that he, with intent to defraud her, prepared an instrument which he represented to be a power of attorney to enable him to act for the plaintiff in regard to certain anticipated litigation and other business, and thereby induced her to sign it; that the instrument was in fact, as he knew, a quitclaim deed of all her right of dower; that she did not read the instrument, or know its true character or effect, but relied on his representations, and, had she read it, was then so ignorant of business that she would not have understood its legal purport; and that she always, until within six months before the filing of this bill, believed that the instrument was a mere power of attorney.

The defendant Van Doren demurred to the amended bill, and afterwards moved to have it stricken from the files, for the reason that it stated a new and different cause of action, the original bill being based upon an express trust, and the amended bill upon a resulting trust arising by implication of law. The court overruled the motion, but sustained the demurrer, on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to the specific relief prayed for, as shown by its opinion sent up with the record and printed in the margin.* A final decree was entered dismissing the bill, and the plaintiff appealed to this court.

The bill alleges ignorance of all the facts

*NELSON, J. The demurrer is sustained, for the reasons:

1st. If the allegations of the bill of complaint are true, the right of the complainant to bring her action to recover dower exists, unless the Statute of Limitations of the State of Minnesota has barred such recovery. Of course, if she has lost all right of action by laches, the bill must fail, for the relief claimed is based upon an interest in the property as dowress.

2d. If not barred by the statute of her action to recover dower, the fraud alleged, which creates an impediment to a recovery at law, can be removed by a suit in equity and her dower obtained. Equity furnishes the most adequate and complete remedy, and dower is highly favored in that forum.

3d. The complainant is not entitled by the fraud constituting the fraud in this case up to within six months prior to the filing of the bill, and these allegations alone take the case out of the statute.

If she has a dower interest in the property, she can proceed and recover it, irrespective of the mortgage or foreclosure. She was not a party to the mortgage and need not redeem, in order to recover her dower interest.

Messiter v. Wright, 16 Pick. 151; Davis v. Wetherell, 13 Allen, 60; Whitcomb v. Sutherland, 18 Ill. 578; Opdyke v. Bartles, 11 N. J. Eq. 133; 2 Scribner, Dower, 151, 152, 1st ed.; 2 Jones, Mortg. § 1067.

Woodworth v. Paige, 5 Ohio St. 70.

The dower right is superior to the mortgage. The complainant, therefore, would not have been a proper party in the suit to foreclose the mortgage; and had she been made a party, the decree would not have barred or in any way affected her right of dower.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The only difference between the original and amended bills is that the first alleges that the defendant, Jones, took the conveyance of the plaintiff's right of dower upon an express trust for her, whereas the second alleges that he procured the conveyance from her by fraudulent misrepresentations as to the nature of the instrument, creating a trust by operation of law in her favor. The other facts alleged in the two bills are substantially identical. Each bill proceeds upon the ground that the defendant Jones was a trustee for the plaintiff, and that the defendant Van Doren, taking the land from him with notice of all the facts, was affected by the trust; and the object of both bills is the same, to obtain the right of dower of which the plaintiff has been deprived by the acts of the defendants, and to which she was entitled under the laws of Minnesota in force at the time of her husband's death. Pub. Stat. 1849–1858, chap. 86, § 1.

The amendment was therefore one which the court in the exercise of its discretion might properly allow, and the motion to strike the amended bill from the files was rightly denied. Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756 [28:1141].

But we are of opinion that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the amended bill.

One who by fraudulent misrepresentations obtains a conveyance from the owner of any interest in property, real or personal, is in equity a trustee ex maleficio for the person defrauded; and anyone taking the property from such trustee with notice of the fraud and of the consequent trust is affected by the trust. Tyler v. Black, 54 U. S. 13 How. 230 [14:124]; National Bank v. Insurance Co. 104 U. S. 54 [26:693]; Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122 [ante, 878]. When a trustee, dealing with the trust property together with property of his own, as one mass, conveys part of the whole to a purchaser who takes it for value, in good faith, without notice of the fraud or of the trust, and who therefore acquires a good title, the question how far the rest of the property shall be charged with the trust, so as fully to indemnify the person defrauded, can only be determined in a court of equity.

In the present case, upon the facts alleged in the amended bill, and admitted by the demurrer, the defendant Jones obtained a conveyance of the plaintiff's dower interest by fraud, and held that interest in trust for her. The defendant Van Doren, taking the property with full notice, was equally affected by the fraud and bound by the trust. Parts of the property, having been conveyed to bona fide purchasers, were beyond the reach of the plain-alleged, if true, to anything more than dower; she is not entitled to the whole property. If, by a fraud perpetrated upon her, which the defendants were cognizant of and participated in, as alleged, she has been prevented from asserting her right to dower by a suit at law, she is not thereby deprived of all remedy to recover it. The relief prayed for in this bill as amended does not necessarily follow from the facts alleged therein and admitted by the demurrer. The demurrer goes to the relief prayed; and, not being entitled to the relief, the bill must fail.

In the original bill, the relief claimed was based upon the admitted allegation that the quitclaim deed was voluntarily given, and accompanying it was a parol trust for the benefit of the grantor, known to the defendants at the time the property was mortgaged. This bill was held bad on demurrer, for the reason that such a trust as alleged could not be created and recognized, it being in violation of the laws governing uses and trusts, which were specially defined by the statutes of Minnesota. The amendments have changed the features of the bill, and it is doubtful whether they are proper; but I have overruled a motion to strike them from the files, and decided the demurrer upon the bill as amended.

tiff. Full, adequate and complete relief, either by awarding to the plaintiff her dower in the whole out of the part not so conveyed, or by awarding her dower in that part only, with damages for having been fraudulently deprived of her interest in the rest, could not be had in an action at law. The case made in the bill, therefore, by reason of the fraud, the trust, and the peculiar relief which the conduct of the defendants has made necessary to be given in order fully to indemnify the plaintiff, is clearly within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Herbert v. Wren, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 370 [3: 374].

The learned Judge of the circuit court, in his opinion sustaining the demurrer to the amended bill, recognized that "The fraud alleged, which creates an impediment to a recovery at law, can be removed by a suit in equity and her dower obtained," and that "Equity furnishes the most adequate and complete remedy, and dower is highly favored in that forum." The ground on which he declined to support the amended bill was that the plaintiff was not entitled to the specific relief prayed for.

It is true that the prayer of the bill, being apparently drawn upon the supposition that the plaintiff might be held bound by the mortgage, is chiefly directed towards securing a right to redeem. In that aspect of the case, she properly offered to redeem the whole property, by paying off the whole mortgage, because she could not, unless at the election of the mortgagee, redeem by paying less. Collins v. Riggs, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 491 [20: 728]; McCabe v. Bellows, 7 Gray, 148. But the general object of the bill is to secure to the plaintiff the dower interest of which she has been defrauded, and the bill contains a prayer for general relief. This is sufficient to enable a court of equity to decree such relief as the facts stated in the bill justify. English v. Foxall, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 595 [7: 531]; Taylor v. Merchants Ins. Co. 50 U. S. 9 How. 390 [13: 187]; Texas v. Hardenberg, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 68 [19: 839].

What has been said furnishes an answer also to the argument that the plaintiff's right, if any, is barred by the Statute of Limitations. The plaintiff is not suing for her dower as such, the right to which accrued in 1863, but for property of which she has been defrauded, and in such a case the Statute of Limitations begins to run only from the discovery of the fraud. Moore v. Greene, 60 U. S. 19 How. 69 [15: 533]; Meader v. Norton, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 442 [20: 184]; Cock v. Van Etten, 12 Minn. 522; Minnesota Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 66, § 6, cl. 6.

Decree reversed, and case remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the amended bill, and to take such further proceedings as may be consistent with this opinion.

State Statutes of Limitation—period of computation—commencement of action—delivery of writ to officer

1. Statutes of Limitations of the State govern personal actions in the courts of the United States.
2. Under section 27 of chapter 138 of the Wisconsin Revised Statutes of 1858, the service of the summons, or its delivery to an officer with intent that it shall be served, is the act by which the period of limitation must be computed.
3. Depositing a process in a place provided or designated by the officer is equivalent to a manual delivery to him.
4. The questions, whether the box in the clerk's office had been duly designated by the marshal as a place where processes to be served by him should be deposited, and whether the summons was either deposited by the clerk in that box, or delivered by him to the marshal, within ten years after May 13, 1862, when the cause of action accrued, were not questions of law for the court, but questions of fact, which should have been submitted to the jury.

Argued April 5, 8, 1889. Decided May 13, 1889.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, to review a judgment for the defendant in an action upon a judgment, the defense being the Statute of Limitations. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an action by a Michigan corporation against a citizen of Wisconsin upon a judgment recovered by the plaintiff against the defendant on May 13, 1862, in the Circuit Court for the County of Wayne and State of Michigan, for the sum of $4,211.56, which the plaintiff now sued for, with interest. The defendant answered that the cause of action did not accrue within ten years.

At the trial, the plaintiff offered in evidence the præcipe, dated May 11, 1872, signed by its attorney, and directing the clerk to issue a summons in this case, returnable according to law; and the summons issued by the clerk, bearing the same date, and returnable on the first Monday (which was the third day) of June, 1872; with the return of the marshal thereon, stating that he had served it on June 3, 1872.

The plaintiff's attorney testified that he prepared the præcipe on the day it bore date, and, when he had filled it up, filed it with the clerk, and then went immediately to the marshal's office, which was one story above the clerk's office in the same building, and told the marshal that there was in the clerk's office a summons in this case for service.

The clerk, who had been in office for more than five years before that day, being called as a witness, and asked as to the practice or habit of the marshal in respect to calling at the clerk's office for process, and as to the usual practice in the clerk's office as to making out and delivering a summons, testified as follows: "The marshal usually stopped at our office, on his way up and down stairs, and got such writs as were waiting for him. We had a box in which we usually placed them, so that he could stop in, open the door, and get them and take them up. The box stood on a bookcase near the door. That had been the custom for years; ever since I had been in the office." "Sometimes attorneys would wait until the process was issued, and take it and deliver it to the marshal; sometimes we would put it in his box, and the marshal would get it there." "I presume the summons must have been made out by me on May 11, 1872; I know of nothing to the contrary. The mark of filing on the præcipe for a summons is in my handwriting; it was filed May 11, 1872. I have no special recollection about that particular summons." "Our practice was to put writs in that box for the marshal. It was our practice to put them there the day when the writ was issued."

On cross examination, he testified that he sometimes delivered processes to the attorney in the case to take to the marshal, and sometimes, if the marshal did not come down immediately, would take them up to him.

On re-examination, he testified that the custom was to issue the summons on the same day the præcipe was filed, and that he had no recollection of ever having neglected to do so.

The plaintiff requested the court to instruct the jury that "the delivery of the process to the marshal for serving may be inferred from the practice and course of business as to delivery of the summons by the clerk, or the practice of the marshal to receive the same in the office of the clerk."

The court declined to give this instruction, and directed a verdict for the defendant, which was returned. The plaintiff duly tendered a bill of exceptions and sued out this writ of error.

Messrs. Alfred L. Cary and F. C. Winkler for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The cause of action accrued May 18, 1862, when the judgment sued on was recovered; and the case turns upon the question whether the action was commenced within ten years afterwards.

As the facts relied on by the plaintiff to prevent the bar of the Statute of Limitations occurred in May, 1872, the question is not affected by the Act of Congress of June 1, 1872, chap. 255, § 5, requiring the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceedings, in actions at law in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, to conform, as near as may be, to those of the courts of record of the State. 17 Stat. at L. 197; Rev. Stat. § 914.

Before the Act of 1872, the form of mesne process and the forms and modes of proceeding in actions at law in the courts of the United States in Wisconsin were such as were used in the highest court of original jurisdiction of the State at the time of its admission into the Union in 1848. Acts of May 19, 1838, chap. 68, 4 Stat. at L. 278; August 6, 1846, chap. 89, § 4, and May 29, 1848, chap. 50, 9 Stat. at L. 57, 233; United States v. Keokuk Council, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 514 [18: 933].

But it had been settled by a series of decisions of this court that Statutes of Limitations, even in personal actions, including actions on judgments, were "laws of the several States" which, except where the Constitution, treaties or statutes of the United States otherwise required or provided, must, under the Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, chap. 20, § 34, "be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States in cases where they apply." 1 Stat. at L. 92; Rev. Stat. § 721; Beatty v. Burnes, 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 98 [3: 500]; M'Cluny v. Silliman, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 270 [7: 676]; Alabama Bank v. Dalton, 50 U. S. 9 How. 522 [13: 242]; Bacon v. Howard, 61 U. S. 20 How. 22 [15: 811]; Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470 [25: 228]. Statutes of Limitation of personal actions are laws affecting remedies only, and not rights, as is clearly shown by the decisions that the only Statutes of Limitation applicable to such an action are the statutes of the State where the action is brought, and not those of the State where the cause of action arose. M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 312 [10: 177]; Townsend v. Jemison, 50 U. S. 9 How. 407 [13: 194]; Walsh v. Mayer, 111 U. S. 31 [28: 338]. It was thus established that Statutes of Limitations of the State governed personal actions in the courts of the United States. Otherwise, in the absence of congressional legislation, there would be no limitation of the time of bringing any personal action in a court of the United States.

The statute of Wisconsin upon this subject, in force in May, 1872, was chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of 1858, entitled "Of the Limitation of Actions," the material provisions of which are as follows:

"SEC. 1. Civil actions can only be commenced within the periods prescribed in this chapter, except when in special cases a different limitation is prescribed by statute."

"SEC. 14. The periods prescribed in section one of this chapter for the commencement of actions, other than for the recovery of real property, shall be as follows:"

"SEC. 16. Within ten years: 1. An action upon a judgment or decree of any court of record of any State or Territory within the United States, or of any court of the United States."

"SEC. 27. An action shall be deemed commenced as to each defendant, when the summons is served on him, or on a codefendant, who is a joint contractor or otherwise united in interest with him. An attempt to commence an action shall be deemed equivalent to the commencement thereof, within the meaning of this chapter, where the summons is delivered, with the intent that it shall be actually served, to the sheriff or other proper officer of the county in which the defendants or one of them usually or last resided." "But such an attempt must be followed by the first publication of the summons, or the service thereof, within sixty days."

The first sentence of the last section, declaring that the service of the summons shall be deemed the commencement of the action, is embodied in the Statute of Limitations, and is as clearly a part of it as the second sentence of the section, declaring that an attempt to commence an action by delivery of the summons to an officer with intent that it shall be actually served shall be deemed equivalent to a commencement thereof. The words "within the meaning of this chapter" were fitly inserted in the second sentence, in order to make clear the intent of the Legislature that this sentence laid down a rule applicable only to the limitation of actions; and were naturally omitted in the first sentence, because the rule therein laid down accorded with similar provisions in a previous chapter, entitled "Of the Manner of Commencing Civil Actions," chap. 124, §§ 1, 11.

The legal construction and effect of section 27 of chapter 138, taken in connection with the preceding sections of the same chapter, is that the service of the summons, or its delivery to an officer with intent that it shall be served, is the act by which the period of limitation must be computed; and the definition of that act is an integral part of the Statute of Limitations, and as such applicable, as the rest of the statute undoubtedly is, to actions in the courts of the United States.

But in order to come within the second sentence of that section, requiring the summons to be "delivered, with the intent that it shall be actually served, to the sheriff or other proper officer," it does not appear to us to be necessary that there should be a manual delivery of the summons to the officer in person. It would be sufficient, for instance, if the attorney left it on the marshal's desk or other place in the marshal's office, so that the marshal would understand that it was left with him for service. It would be equally sufficient if the attorney, or the clerk acting by his direction, placed the summons in a box in the clerk's office, designated by the marshal, with the clerk's assent, as a place where processes to be served by him should be deposited, and from which he usually took them daily.

The defendant much relies on an opinion of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in which it was said that "The fact that the summons was not placed in the hands of an officer of the county in which the action was intended to be commenced would be fatal to the claim that there was an attempt to commence the action within the meaning of § 4240" of the Revised Statutes of 1878, corresponding to § 27 of chap. 188 of the Revised Statutes of 1858. Sherry v. Gilmore, 58 Wis. 324, 334. But in that case there was no service or attempt to serve, except through the mail; and the court had not before it the question whether depositing a process in a place provided or designated by the officer was equivalent to putting it in his own hands.

In the case at bar, the testimony introduced by the plaintiff tended to show that the attorney filled out the præcipe to the clerk to issue the summons, and filed the præcipe with the clerk on May 11, 1872, and immediately went to the marshal's office, one story above, in the same building, and told him there was in the clerk's office a summons in this case for service. The summons issued by the clerk bore date of the same day. The clerk testified that he presumed that the summons must have been made out on the day of its date, and knew nothing to the contrary; that his custom was to issue the summons on the same day the præcipe was filed, and he had no recollection of ever having neglected to do so; but had no personal recollection about this particular summons. He also testified that there was a box on a bookcase near the door in his office, where he usually placed such writs as were waiting for the marshal, so that he could stop in, open the door, and get them and take them up, and he usually stopped on his way up and down stairs and got such writs; and that the practice of the clerk's office was to put writs in that box for the marshal on the day on which they were issued, but the clerk sometimes delivered processes to the attorney to take to the marshal, and sometimes, if the marshal did not come down immediately, took them up to him.

Upon this testimony, the questions, whether the box in the clerk's office had been duly designated by the marshal as a place where processes to be served by him should be deposited, and whether the summons in this case was either deposited by the clerk in that box, or delivered by him to the marshal, within ten years after May 13, 1862, when the cause of action accrued, were not questions of law for the court, but questions of fact, which should have been submitted to the jury. The court therefore erred in not giving the instruction requested, and in directing the jury to return a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment reversed and case remanded, with directions to set aside the verdict and to order a new trial.

GEORGE W. HILL, Plff. in Err.,
v.
GEORGE F. HARDING ET AL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 699-704.)

Discharge in bankruptcy, effect of in attachment suit—sureties on attachment bond—effect on them of discharge of principal.

1. A discharge in bankruptcy does not prevent an attaching creditor from taking judgment against the debtor in such limited form as may enable him to reap the benefit of his attachment.

2. When the attachment remains in force, the creditor, notwithstanding the discharge, may have judgment against the bankrupt, to be levied only upon the property attached.

3. When the attachment has been dissolved by the defendant entering into a bond or recognizance, with sureties, conditioned to pay to the plaintiffs any judgment rendered against him on a final trial, there is nothing in the Bankrupt Act to prevent the state court from rendering a judgment against the bankrupt, notwithstanding his discharge, for the purpose of enabling plaintiffs to proceed against the sureties in the bond given on the attachment.

4. If the bond was executed before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, the discharge of the bankrupt protects him from liability to the obligees, so that, in an action on the bond against him and his sureties, any judgment recovered by the plaintiffs must be accompanied with a perpetual stay of execution against him; but his discharge does not prevent that judgment from being rendered generally against them.

Submitted April 16, 1889. Decided May 13, 1889.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois, to review a judgment of that Court, affirming a judgment of an inferior Court of the State on a verdict for the plaintiffs in an action of assumpsit commenced by attachment of defendant's real estate, and an order for a perpetual stay of execution. Affirmed.

Reported below, 2 West. Rep. 885, 116 Ill. 92.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

This was an action of assumpsit, commenced by Harding and others against Hill in an inferior court of the State of Illinois, in accordance with the statutes of the State, by attachment of the defendant's real estate. The attachment was dissolved, in accordance with those statutes, by the defendant giving bond, or, more strictly speaking, entering into a recognizance, with sureties, conditioned to pay to the plaintiffs "the amount of the judgment and costs which may be rendered against him in this suit on a final trial hereof, within ninety days after such judgment shall be rendered." After verdict for the plaintiffs, and before judgment thereon, and on proceedings in bankruptcy commenced more than four months after the attachment, the defendant was adjudged a bankrupt under the Bankrupt Act of the United States, and applied to the state court, under § 5106 of the Revised Statutes, for a stay of proceedings to await the determination of the court in bankruptcy upon the question of his discharge. The application was denied, and judgment rendered against the defendant on the verdict, and upon a bill of exceptions, stating these facts, that judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of the State. 93 Ill. 77. Upon a former writ of error, this court reversed the judgment of that court and remanded the case to it for further proceedings, upon the ground that the defendant was entitled to the stay applied for, without considering the question whether the court in which the suit was pending might, after the defendant had obtained his discharge in bankruptcy, render a special judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the purpose of charging the sureties on the recognizance given to dissolve the attachment. 107 U. S. 631, 635 [27: 498, 495].

The case was then remanded by the Supreme Court of Illinois to the inferior court with a direction that, upon its satisfactorily appearing that the defendant since the verdict had obtained his discharge in bankruptcy, a judgment should be entered for the plaintiff and against the defendant upon the verdict, with a perpetual stay of execution. The inferior court thereupon denied a motion of the defendant for leave to file a formal plea setting up his discharge in bankruptcy; admitted in evidence a copy of that discharge, offered by the plaintiff and objected to by the defendant as not duly verified; refused the defendant's request for a trial by jury on the question of his discharge in bankruptcy; denied a motion to enter a judgment in his favor, releasing him from all liability subsequent to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, on account of all causes of action involved in this suit; and ordered judgment on the verdict, pursuant to the mandate of the supreme court of the State, with a perpetual stay of execution. Upon a bill of exceptions the judgment and order were affirmed by the Supreme Court of Illinois. 116 Ill. 92 [2 West. Rep. 885]. The defendant sued out this writ of error.

Mr. George W. Brandt, for plaintiff in error:

Sureties are favorites in law, and no intendments will be made against them.

The fact that the sureties may hereafter have a right, upon paying the amount of the judgment, to recover over against the principal, affords no reason why the statute should not authorize, or the court should not order a special judgment to charge the sureties according to the terms of the bond which both principal and sureties have voluntarily given.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this writ of error is quite distinct from that which arose when the case was before this court at a former term, as reported in 107 U. S. 631 [27: 493]. The only point then decided was that the defendant on his application made after verdict and before judgment, was entitled to a stay of proceedings to await the determination of the court in bankruptcy upon the question of his discharge. The question not then passed upon, and now presented, is whether, since he has obtained his discharge in bankruptcy, there is anything in the provisions of the Bankrupt Act to prevent the state court from rendering judgment on the verdict against him, with a perpetual stay of execution, so as to prevent the plaintiffs from enforcing the judgment against him, and leave them at liberty to proceed against the sureties in the bond or recognizance given to dissolve an attachment made more than four months before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy.

Such attachments being recognized as valid by the Bankrupt Act (Rev. Stat. § 5044), a discharge in bankruptcy does not prevent the attaching creditors from taking judgment against the debtor in such limited form as may enable them to reap the benefit of their attachment. When the attachment remains in force, the creditors, notwithstanding the discharge, may have judgment against the bankrupt, to be levied only upon the property attached. Peck v. Jenness, 48 U. S. 7 How. 612, 623 [12: 841]; Doe v. Childress, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 642 [22:549]. When the attachment has been dissolved, in accordance with the statutes of the State, by the defendant's entering into a bond or recognizance, with sureties, conditioned to pay to the plaintiffs, within a certain number of days after any judgment rendered against him on a final trial, the amount of that judgment, the question whether the state court is powerless to render even a formal judgment against him for the single purpose of charging such sureties, or, in the phrase of Chief Justice Waite in Wolf v. Stix, 99 U. S. 1, 9 [25:309, 313], whether "the judgment is defeated by the bankruptcy of the person for whom the obligation is assumed," depends not upon any provision of the Bankrupt Act, but upon the extent of the authority of the state court under the local law. Whether that authority is exercised under the settled practice of the court, as in Illinois, or only by virtue of an express statute, as in Massachusetts, there is nothing in the Bankrupt Act to prevent the rendering of such a judgment. The bond or recognizance takes the place of the attachment as a security for the debt of the attaching creditors; they cannot dispute the election, given to the debtor by statute, of substituting the new security for the old one; and the giving of the bond or recognizance, by dissolving the attachment, increases the estate to be distributed in bankruptcy. The judgment is not against the person or property of the bankrupt, and has no other effect than to enable the plaintiff to charge the sureties, in accordance with the express terms of their contract, and with the spirit of that provision of the Bankrupt Act which declares that "No discharge shall release, discharge or affect any person liable for the same debt for or with the bankrupt, either as partner, joint contractor, indorser, surety or otherwise." Rev. Stat. § 5118; Re Albrecht, 17 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 287; Hill v. Harding, 116 Ill. 92 [2 West. Rep. 885]; Barnstable Sav. Bank v. Higgins, 124 Mass. 115.

If the bond was executed before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, the discharge of the bankrupt protects him from liability to the obligees, so that, in an action on the bond against him and his sureties, any judgment recovered by the plaintiffs must be accompanied with a perpetual stay of execution against him; but his discharge does not prevent that judgment from being rendered generally against them. Wolf v. Stix, above cited. If the sureties should ultimately pay the amount of any such judgment, and thereby acquire a claim to be reimbursed by their principal the amount so paid (which is a point not now in issue), it would be because his liability to them upon such a claim did not exist at the time of the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and therefore could not be proved in bankruptcy nor barred by the discharge, and consequently would not be affected by any provision of the Bankrupt Act.

The courts of Illinois, in the judgment rendered in this case, having assumed the validity of the defendant's discharge in bankruptcy, he has not been prejudiced by the rulings denying leave to file after verdict a formal plea of the discharge in bankruptcy, and admitting in evidence an unverified copy of the discharge, and refusing his request for a trial by jury upon that issue.

Judgment affirmed.

In Memoriam.

STANLEY MATTHEWS,*

DIED MARCH 22, 1889.*

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BENCH AND BAR OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

SATURDAY, March 30, 1889.

THE Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States and the officers of the Court met in the Court Room in the Capitol at twelve o'clock, and the meeting was called to order by Mr. WILLIAM A. MAURY,

On motion of Mr. MAURY, Mr. WILLIAM M. EVARTS was called to the Chair.

On motion of Mr. JOSEPH E. MCDONALD, Mr. JAMES H. MCKENNEY was elected Secretary.

On taking the chair Mr. EVARTS said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE BAR OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

The afflictive intelligence of the death of the Associate Justice, so much honored and beloved, Judge MATTHEWS, was brought to the attention of the Court and of the profession and to the public a week ago, and presents the occasion of our meeting here. It is the purpose in calling this meeting that an arrangement should now be made that some early day be named at which suitable resolutions should be presented and considered, at which an opportunity should be given to the Bar for the expression of their interest, their esteem, their respect, their admiration and affection for our deceased friend. An early day has been fixed upon and will be suggested, which, if acceptable to the profession now represented here, will be adopted.

Mr. MAURY moved that the Chairman appoint a committee of eight members to prepare suitable resolutions to be presented to a future meeting; which motion was agreed to, and the following committee was appointed by the Chair:

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH,
Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Hon. GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS,
Hon. SAMUEL SHELLABARGER,
Hon. GEORGE A. JENKS,
Hon. JOSEPH E. MCDONALD.

On motion of Mr. MAURY, the following resolution was agreed to:

Resolved, That when this meeting shall adjourn, it shall be to reassemble in this Chamber at eleven o'clock Saturday, the 6th of April, proximo.

Adjourned.

SATURDAY, April 6, 1889.

Mr. EVARTS: The adjourned meeting held in commemoration of our deceased friend, Judge MATTHEWS, is now assembled, and I await the pleasure of gentlemen who are now present.

Mr. EDMUNDS: I am instructed by the committee appointed at a previous meeting of the Bar, to which this is an adjournment, to report resolutions upon the subject recommended by that committee, which I now hand to the Chair and ask that they may be read.

Resolutions.

Resolved, That the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States deeply deplores the decease of the late Mr. Justice MATTHEWS, whereby the country has lost an always patriotic and respected citizen, alike eminent in his private and public career, the Bar one of its long-time leaders, conspicuous as an example of the best relations of our profession with the administration of justice, and the Court itself a member fitted by character, temperament, learning, and industry to the place he held in the highest judicial tribunal of a great nation. His name is rightly enrolled among those honored by their countrymen.

Resolved, That the Bar presents to the family of the departed Justice its sincere sympathy and condolence in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to present these resolutions to the Court for such consideration as may be fit.

Resolved, That the Chairman be requested to transmit a copy hereof to Mrs. Matthews.

REMARKS OF MR. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: In presenting these resolutions framed by your committee, and which necessarily are brief and condensed, I think it a duty as it is a pleasure so far as one may have pleasure on an occasion of this kind, to say a few words.

The state of nature to-day has made our meeting somewhat less full than doubtless it otherwise would have been; but it has seemed to me that nature has rather shown for this occasion a sympathy in the memorial we now celebrate, in gloom and sorrow, but with a white robe.

I did not have the pleasure to know Mr. Justice MATTHEWS until he appeared before the Electoral Tribunal, in this very Chamber in the winter of 1876–'77. His argument on the side whose pretensions he maintained was, I think I do no injustice in saying as it respects other arguments upon the same side and upon the other, almost first among the foremost of the strictly legal and constitutional considerations that should have influenced, and, I think, did influence the judgment of that Tribunal.

Soon afterward, when Senator Sherman resigned to take a place in the Cabinet of President Hayes, Mr. MATTHEWS was elected to the Senate and took his place in the Senate, I think about the middle of October, 1877, and his career there terminated in the changes of political affairs in the State of Ohio on the third of March, I think, 1879—somewhat less than two years of senatorial service, but he brought to that service and displayed in that service in a new and unaccustomed arena a character, a capacity, a learning, a patience, a courtesy, a self-possession and a mastery, that is very rare indeed in so short a service. And in that career he illustrated one, as I think, of the most lovely of all human traits, a kindness, a generosity, a faith, that in his heart he had for his fellowman.

That kindness and generosity and sympathy had led him to be betrayed, as it were, into what the newspaper press bruited as a questionable relation with a particular person who had been desirous of some public honor or emolument. He naturally resented such a calumny; and that calumny of course, as all calumnies do against really honest men as he was, quickly disappeared. Leaving the Senate, he was nominated to be a Justice of this Court. There were Senators possibly—the law of the Senate does not allow me to name them—but outside of that law and outside of that Chamber I may say that I was one—who thought it not fit for the public interest that he should become a member of the Court that sits in this Chamber. The quality of Mr. MATHEWS' disposition was such (he well knowing the fact—for there was candor all around—and which of course did not touch either his character or capacity in the slightest, but related to certain particular public considerations alone) that the intimate confidential relations that had existed between him and myself in the Senate were never disturbed for a single instant. Upright, candid and independent himself, he had the nobleness of heart and tenderness of disposition to recognize an attitude that his best friends might take, which seemed to stand in the way of his just and honorable ambition. I think it is one of the best things we can say of any man, that he has the nobleness and greatness of character to hold an attitude like that.

He came to the Bench, notwithstanding; and it gives me such pleasure as one may have in such a case, although he knew it long before he died, to say on an occasion like this, that the grounds upon which many Senators (myself among others), thought it unfit that he should be called to this particular public service, turned out to be entirely mistaken, and in the public respects towards which our solicitudes were directed, his opinions delivered in this Court and his assent to opinions upon that class of questions delivered by other judges, justified the President of the United States in insisting upon his appointment and convinced me, and I think no doubt all the other Senators who were opposed to him at the time, that it was our mistake and not that of the President of the United States.

Mr. MATTHEWS, it has seemed to me, in his career from 1877 to 1888, when his fatal illness prevented his longer sitting here, showed himself to be among the conspicuous and best examples, of which it is true we have so many among the living as well as among the departed, of that composition of mind, temperament and heart to make an almost ideal judge. The counsel who, through want of familiarity with methods of procedure, their diffidence or embarrassment in coming for the first time before this great tribunal, fell into trouble, always found in him a sympathizing and helpful friend, rather than receiving, as rarely but sometimes happens, a treatment that would be perfectly correct applied to long experienced leaders at the Bar. But if any young member of this or any Bar, arguing a first cause, fell into any difficulty or embarrassment of statement or argument, Mr. Justice MATTHEWS was among the first to be always ready to, as it may be said, "put him on his feet again" and to enable him to develop his best powers. I think that is one of the characteristics that a great judge deserves to have mentioned in connection with his career;—and when we come to the decision of cases, I think every gentlemen who studies the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States will be ready to say that his opinions are among those displaying a wealth of legal learning, clear statement, and fair and just logic. Without bias, without prejudice, with fairness of statement of the proposition against which he decides, with no obscurity in meeting the strongest aspect of the point that he overrules, his opinions, I think, will be among the lasting and best of the memorials we have which are the daily and yearly contributions to the progress, welfare and justice of Government.

And so, Mr. Chairman, to be brief with these recollections that I have of my personal intercourse with Mr. Justice MATTHEWS, so intimate, so confidential and so likely, as the world goes, to have been strained by the serious, to him and as it has turned out to the public, mistake in which I fell in regard to his views concerning certain particular public questions in connection with his appointment to this bench, it is in the sadness of such an occasion a grateful pleasure to me to speak of him in the best terms that my mind and voice can, as a man and as a judge. And when we come for a single moment to his personal relations apart from his public career, it is impossible for me to use words too strong in respect of the gentleness of his disposition, the affability of his conduct, the patience of his listening to the appeals of those who came to him for assistance or support, to the kindliness of his relations; not only in the circle of which he was the chief at home, and of which it is almost indelicate for me to speak at all, they are so tender, to say that in all these private and personal relations, in the church, in the neighborhood, in the community, I think no one ever went away from him sorrowful in respect to any treatment they had received, whether he could do the thing they wished for or not. And in the long painful illness that at last overcame him, I had frequent occasion to know personally how gently, patiently, hopefully,—not hopefully merely in the sense of hoping to be restored to his public career and duties, but hopefully in whatever aspect his Lord and Master might lead his career, either to his grave or to be restored, he gave the sweet example of that masterful mind and spirit that took what the Pagans called his fate, but what our religion calls the faith and hope in what the Lord might give him to go or to stay. I lay upon his grave the best tribute I can of affection and respect.

REMARKS OF MR. GEORGE HOADLY.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I do not know what arrangements, if any, have been made for the conduct of this meeting, but I feel that, being, with a single exception, the oldest surviving friend of those who were very close and dear to STANLEY MATTHEWS, debarred by distance from mingling my tears with the Cincinnati Bar, of which, from the time of my admission to practice until his promotion to this Bench, we were both members, I do not intrude in expressing my grief here now.

As long ago as 1843, when the late Justice William B. Woods and I were boys together in the Western college where I graduated, members of a Greek letter society, the Beta Theta Pi, we found on the list of the members of the Cincinnati alumni chapter the name of THOMAS STANLEY MATTHEWS. That was my first introduction to him, but he never was to me anything but STANLEY; I never called him anything but STANLEY, and he rarely addressed me except by my first name. Once, in a joking way, I asked him why he had dropped his first name. He replied in the same spirit: "My father's name was Thomas, and he opened my love letters."

In 1846, going as a student into the office of the great man who presided in this Court from 1864 to 1873, MATTHEWS and I became acquaintances and friends. With him, I was a disciple of Chief Justice Chase; a disciple politically, and a loving follower personally. From that time until this, from that day until our friendship was interrupted by his death, we have been friends, united in affection, without doubts; rivals often, never jealous.

I hope I bore towards him and his faults—for he was a man and had faults—the same tender, kind indulgence with which I know he treated me. He was a man of great ardor, powerful in physique, with a mind strengthened by the pursuit of knowledge—knowledge of letters and the law. He was a man of great ardor—ardent in friendship—by this he lost and gained. Ardent in political and legal warfare, the only serious error, in my judgment, of his life, of which I have knowledge, with which he could reproach himself, was the result of the ardor of the moment in the prosecution of his duties as a public officer. This ardor, this energy, this fullness and impetuosity of executive power, coupled with great reading, wide survey and scope of knowledge, a retentive memory, mastery of the language we use, educated by years of editorial service in its habitual handling and management, made him a most powerful stater of his cases to court or jury. He depended for his success as a legal leader on no adventitious aids. He met court and jury with a plain, unadorned statement, beautiful in persuasion because of the logical order in which he arranged his facts and cited his law.

Two of the best years of my life were spent on the bench of the Superior Court of Cincinnati, by his side, in the company of him who was to us both a legal father, our senior associate, your relative and friend, Mr. Chairman, the late Judge Bellamy Storer. There I learned to know fully the power of STANLEY MATTHEWS as a judge; his ability to withhold opinion, to wait, to consider, to deliberate, not to conclude until every argument, every resource of aid for correct adjudication had been probed and penetrated and weighed and measured. He was a great judge, he was a great lawyer, and he was such, in my opinion, mainly because to large powers he added a pure mind and the fixed determination to do that which was right and right only.

He brought great learning and a wonderfully powerful imagination to his service on the Bench. His imagination was his strength and his weakness. I use this word, Mr. Chairman, in its highest sense: he had the power to be another, to enter into the minds of others, and live with them, so that the thoughts and feelings and conscience of others might find storage in his mind. His imagination was sympathetic; it went out to young and old, preparing a warm reception for those who came to him, of wise advice and counsel, and a courteous, sympathetic disregard of the errors which he saw in them. This power made him a great judge; it made him a great lawyer; it enabled him to feel with others, and be the master of their situation, of clients and juries and courts and antagonists, by appreciating and knowing their relations and reasonable desires as only a man in whom imagination is a great factor can.

In every department of life in which men meet each other, except that of blood or marriage relationship, I have met this man. In forty-three years of intimate converse not a subject, political, social, religious, but has been a matter of high debate between us. Often we saw together, and often we differed. Our political views from the beginning to the end were the same, although we sought our ends by different methods and through different channels, largely, I think, because he was a man who coupled with this ardor of action, this power of imagination, great loving faculties of heart, and was attracted to political associations by personal affection. If you find any error or wrong charged upon him and think the blame deserved, you may certainly ascribe this to the desire which possessed him, night and day, in season and out of season, to gratify the wishes of others. I do not mean that he weakly complied, but it cost him much more than it does ordinary men to refuse the solicitations of those who sought to direct his energies in their own behalf.

Until the year 1857 STANLEY MATTHEWS had been a Rationalist, of some form or other, in religious opinion. In that year he buried in one grave three children, and this calamity, which overwhelmed him for a time almost to the upsetting of his mental equipose, led to his re-examination into the foundations of opinion upon the most serious of subjects. His father had been a Unitarian, and he, if not a member, at least a habitual attendant at a Universalist Church when this calamity overtook him. He came out of the struggle a Calvanistic Presbyterian, holding opinions which he never yielded—in the faith of which he died. He sought to bend, so far as he might properly, those with whom he lived in familiar friendship, to his changed views. That he failed in this is not to be ascribed to his want of powers of persuasion, for these were exercised to their fullest extent. In some cases he succeeded, and brought with him into the Church of his later life a company of minds he swayed. In this, however, as in all his life, the power to see into the minds of others and to appreciate their convictions kept him from ever exercising in any sense what might be called authority. He, a Calvanistic Presbyterian, an elder in the Church, devoted to its creed with all the fervor of his ardent nature, never failed to remember that his father and others he loved, who still lived in the same communion with his father, reasoned otherwise, and his power of sympathetic imagination was so great, that he was always ready to think that they too believed as sincerely as he, so that his persuasions to them were addressed in the form of gentle guidance, not authoritative direction. In other words, Mr. Chairman—for I wish to emphasize this point—if it be possible for one who believes with all his mind the five points of Calvinistic theology, as STANLEY MATTHEWS did, at the same time to be what is called a liberal Christian, he was the man. When, authorized by the School Board of Cincinnati, I telegraphed him at Washington, soliciting his co-operation in the effort to maintain the legal position the Board had taken, that the Bible should not be used as book of worship in the common schools of that city, I knew what answer I would receive as well as when I received it; for I knew that his Christianity, ardent, devoted, springing from the full conviction of a man of high mental powers, was a Christianity which depended on carrying others into assent and sympathy by the logic of its reasoning and the loveliness of its life, and not by the force of authority or the authority of force. He entered our case, and Judge Stallo and I assigned him the position of leader. How well he defended his opinions as a Christian, and at the same time proved that they would and could win the battle without the aid of legal authority, is recorded in the report which was made of the discussion on that occasion.

He was lovely in his life. Yet it was a life of sorrow, for those three were not the only loved ones he buried. He lived through more grief and more happiness than is usually assigned to man. Those who had the happiness to be his wife and children may well mourn for the presence that cannot be replaced. I saw him last six weeks ago; he talked hopefully of resuming his seat on this Bench in October; he talked hopefully of a trip to Europe which he might make in the mean time. I left his bedside full of hope for him, for he had the magnetic power of infusing others with his courage. I left him with the hope he communicated to me; and after I had gone, and the doubts of colder moments intruded upon my mind, I knew, at least, that whatever might happen to others, whatever place might be allotted him in the great cycle into which he has entered, he would go "sustained by an unfaltering trust."

The future is hidden from us. It is the doctrine of the French philosopher, Comté, that we live only in the impress which our lives make upon those who are with us and those who read and hear of us. Tried by the belief in which STANLEY MATTHEWS died, he has entered into the rest prepared for just men. Judged by the other belief of which I have spoken, at least he has communicated to this generation, help to generations to come; and as long as his opinions shall be read, and his life remembered, some impress for good derived from the words and works of this good and great man will be retained.

REMARKS OF MR. R. D. MUSSEY.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: No one form suffices to reveal the godhead of Brahma. Successive and progressive incarnations are required to complete the unveiling of his divinity.

What the Hindoo fables of his god has its analogue in the life of the American citizen. The American is so large a man—has relations to so many sides of life—that his full capacity cannot be known but through many and varied avocations.

We should not, then, charge to inconstancy that Mr. Justice MATTHEWS, before he occupied a seat upon this Bench, had been known as a Journalist, a Lawyer, a Judge, a Soldier, a Politician, and a Legislator. These were the avatars of his conspicuous career. In each one he showed a powerful will and a vigorous mentality; in each one he exercised and developed faculties and characteristics that prepared for his latest and most conspicuous position.

It needs no argument that a judge must grow from a lawyer. Though the judicial bent and that of the advocate differ, he would cut a sorry figure on the Bench who had not those habits of research, of application, of continuity, of logical thinking, of precision of statement, which are begotten at the Bar.

The journalist learns an art of persuasion not laid down in the books, but potent nevertheless in the days of fast presses and rapid transit. He acquires a certain method of statement, the knack of "putting things," crude often and coarse, but incisive and effective, compelling attention even where he cannot enforce conviction. They who knew the associate and successor of Gamaliel Bailey and heard STANLEY MATTHEWS' arguments or read his opinions, cannot deem themselves mistaken in holding that he owed much of his forceful utterance in the forensic field to his editorship of that early Cincinnati paper, The Herald.

An American citizen in the full exercise of his citizenship cannot avoid politics. In a Republic—as the term implies—public affairs are the concernment of every member of the body politic. He gives expression to his views of them through voice or pen, and so seeks to influence others. But he is not content with individual effort; he combines those who think with him into a "party," dominated by a distinctive line of thought, of construction, of policy. The party man inevitably becomes a politician for the furtherance of his principles. His contention may be a noble one, his ends high, and his means honorable. They may be debasing. That is the fault of the man and not of the system. It is safe to say that a citizen of a Republic who is ignorant of the politics of his day, and who does not more or less participate in them, is unacquainted with one of the most vital forces of the civil society of which he is a unit, and fails to touch elbows with his fellow-man.

The aim of politics is the right ordering of the State. The policy of a Republic is shaped more frequently by the Legislature than by the Executive. The statute-book furnishes the rule of conduct and denounces the penalty for its infraction. Considerations of public clamor, of constitutional limitation, of absolute right, of adaptability, of the exigencies created by the progress of science, of commerce, of social development, all enter into the making of laws. Into their frame-work enter also considerations of perspicuity, of technical terms, of apt phraseology, of accuracy of expression. To him who is to construe laws it is a high advantage to have been familiarized with the enactment of laws.

Justice MATTHEWS studied in all these schools. He was a pupil also in the school of the soldier. In that school obedience, discipline, control, bravery and decision are taught, as in no other. A mistake there means disaster, death, disgrace. To think quickly and justly; to act well and strongly; to grasp—so far as man may—the consequences of the deed to be done; to subordinate individual effort, or to rely upon it; to weigh results; to move forward, or to stand fast; to snatch victory from defeat; to follow up advantage and make success successful; and to do all this through the handling of men—with men's passions, men's wills, men's caprices—surely he who has graduated in this school bears a diploma that commands the respect of all mankind.

Justice MATTHEWS entered the military service of the United States in the Twenty-Third Ohio Volunteer Infantry early in 1861. The roster of that regiment bears the names of W. S. Rosecrans, E. P. Scammon, R. B. Hayes, James M. Comly, Russell Hastings, and Joseph T. Webb. Comment on the career of these officers with whom he was associated is unnecessary. Promotion of his superiors gave him the lieutenant-colonelcy of this regiment before October, 1861, when he was made Colonel of the Fifty-First Ohio. His military service was honorable rather than brilliant; he was Provost-Marshal of Nashville, and an excellent one; he commanded a brigade, and gained distinction in the affair of Dobson's Ferry. He was elected a Judge of the Superior Court of Cincinnati while in the field, and in April, 1863, resigned and returned to civil life. The last dress parade of his regiment is still remembered by the Ohio men who saw it; it was witnessed by Rosecrans and Thomas and many lesser lights in the Army of the Cumberland. Parting with his soldiers, Colonel MATTHEWS made an address of farewell, full of feeling and patriotism. He based his acceptance of a civil position and his resignation from military command upon the distrust he felt of his ability to master the technique of arms; a distrust, I may say, not entertained by the men he commanded nor the generals who commanded him.

Equipped with rich experience and varied knowledge STANLEY MATTHEWS came to this Bench May 12, 1881, and had, practically, seven years of active life upon it. During that time he delivered the opinion and judgment of the Court in two hundred and five cases; he dissented in five cases; and in eleven he did not sit. His first opinion is found in the 104th United States; his last in the 127th United States. The eminent logic, the careful reasoning, the lucid thoughtfulness of those opinions, his resolution of complex legal problems, gave him a rank here which those who preceded me are more competent than I to estimate. My personal admiration of these monuments of his judicial career is of the highest. Already more than one of the cases he decided, by his decision of it, has become a leading case, establishing the law for Bench and Bar alike.

The war in which Colonel MATTHEWS engaged had passed into memories and results before Justice MATTHEWS had the rare privilege of expounding from this august tribunal that Constitution which he had helped upon the field of battle to uphold and enlarge.

What he thought of that war and the actors in it, what he deemed it to have accomplished, what consequences he saw and foretold from it, are written at large in his admirable address before the Army of the Cumberland Society at the reunion held in this city when the Thomas statute was unveiled in 1879.

Permit me to read a passage from that address:

It was a victory not only for the nation, but for mankind, and marks a step in the progress of the race that can not and will not be reversed. The evils of war—and there are many that always follow in its train—will be forgotten and effaced; but the good will remain forever. Nationality restored upon the basis of universal freedom, and the political and civil equality of all the citizens of the Commonwealth, is a result that vindicates itself, needing neither apology nor defense. Those who were overcome in the conflict, as well as those who overcame them, can unite, without bitterness or hypocrisy, in a triumph that divides the trophies of its good equally with both. And when those who were our brethren, and became our enemies, but not more ours than their own, are able and willing, as they ought, to join with us in grateful and joyous thanksgiving to the gracious God who turned the scales of battle not against them but against their cause, we, too, can, without humiliation or self-contempt, join with them in solemn celebrations and funeral rites over the graves of Confederate as well as Federal dead, as sacrifices and expiations not made in vain.

Colonel MATTHEWS had seen and felt, in a gigantic war that wasted treasure and wrecked health and destroyed life, the effect of a political heresy begotten of a constitutional fallacy. As Justice he never forgot this experience; and his judicial opinions on constitutional questions were weighty with the conscientious solemnity of a judgment based on observation as well as reasoning. He realized that there was a logic of events, if possible, more inexorable than that of the mind.

Had he not been a soldier, he had not sat upon this Bench. His army life was a necessary link in the chain of causes that elevated him to this position.

Because I am convinced of this, because I feel that but for this all the endowments of his ample nature and all the acquisitions of his energetic mentality would have failed to place him here, I have ventured, as perhaps the only one present who served in the Army with him and knew him as a soldier, to speak in this presence.

There are bonds of all sorts in this world of ours,
Fetters of friendship and ties of flowers.
* * * * *
But there's never a bond, old friend, like this—
We have drunk from the same canteen.

Mr. Chairman, at that impressive service that preceded the removal of the mortal remains of Justice MATTHEWS to that most beautiful of cemeteries near his Ohio home, the President, his Cabinet, this Court, Senators, Representatives, men and women of mark in literature, in science, in social life, in religion, in all departments of life, titled and untitled friends, neighbors, by their presence testified their respect and expressed their sorrow. But, Mr. Chairman, there were none more sincere in this demonstration than the delegation from that military order to which the dead Justice, by virtue of his military service, was proud to belong; for his life had exemplified that order's legend: Lex Regit: Arma Tuentur.

REMARKS OF MR. WILLIAM S. FLIPPIN.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I beg leave to add a few words to what has been already so well said. A few miles northeast of Columbia, Maury County, in the heart of Middle Tennessee, a country of rich pastures and fat flocks and herds, a land fit to be called, in mythological language, the Gardens of the Gods, STANLEY MATTHEWS pursued a curriculum of study at the manual-labor school there established, one of the first as well as one of the best then to be found in the Southwest. One of the instructors in that school was William L. Willeford, a very able teacher in mathematics. He doubtless subjected his pupil to severe mental training, for when one reads the opinions of the late Justice he will notice the logical matter in which he states his propositions of law, and how well he demonstrates in solving them the justness of his conclusions—proving now and then their correctness, by showing that no other solution than the one given accords with sound reason. Near by this school, of which mention was made, lived a prosperous farmer and leading citizen, whose mansion the young student visited, and where he became acquainted with, and made court to, one of the daughters of the house; the beautiful, talented, accomplished, and lovable Miss Black, who subsequently became his wife.

Returning to Ohio, he entered and graduated at Kenyon College, and at a later day went back to Tennessee, where he settled down as a lawyer at Columbia. He possessed small means, but was rich in hope and mental and physical endowments. The Bar at that place was unusually strong. James K. Polk, who was subsequently elected President of the United States, had returned to the practice; his partner, James H. Thomas, who afterwards for two terms represented the district in Congress, was one of the best common-law lawyers of his time; Terry H. Cahal, subsequently Chancellor; Alfred O. P. Nicholson, who was editor of the Washington Union, twice sent by his State to represent her in the United States Senate, and who died Chief Justice of the State; Samuel D. Frierson, elected by the Legislature, years afterwards, Chancellor; his young relative, William Frierson Cooper, subsequently Chancellor of the Nashville District and later Judge of the Supreme Court; Russell Houston, for many years past counsel of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, and Gideon J. Pillow, a very successful lawyer, who figured in two wars, were the men he had to contend with. The young lawyer made a most favorable impression upon these men, especially upon the brilliant Cahal, who, moved by generous impulses, said to him one day that the place was too small for a man of his capacity; that he should return at once to Cincinnati, which was then the growing city of the West, where, he was assured, in a few years he would rise high in his profession if he should pursue the proper course. This advice he acted upon, and was the turn in the tide of his life which led on to fortune. Before very long he ranked at the Bar of that State with Ranney, Waite, Thurman, Hoadly, Taft, Stanbery, Pugh, and Groesbeck. He showed to the greatest advantage, perhaps, before the Electoral Commission, where his talents attracted the attention of the whole country. And it may not be too much to say, Mr. Chairman, that, on the day he finally quitted the ranks of the profession, he left behind no more vigorous intellect, or better or greater lawyer.

When the trying ordeal of confirmation was at hand, Tennessee friends and Tennessee associations came to his aid. Meetings of the Bar were held in several towns in the State, and that at Memphis, where there was a full attendance, passed resolutions unanimously requesting our Senators in Congress not only, if I remember aright, to vote in his favor, but to do all they could to secure favorable action by the Senate. The support of one of these gentlemen was in doubt; but let it be said to the credit of the senior Senator from that State that, turning a deaf ear to the cry of party and moved by the most solemn convictions of duty, he hearkened to the wishes of his brethren at home, and gave the vote which brought about confirmation, though effected by a majority of one only.

As a Circuit Judge Mr. Justice MATTHEWS

was all that could be desired. His broad mind at a glance took in all the material facts of a case, and enabled him to weed out all that was immaterial or irrelevant; while, without seeming difficulty, he applied the proper legal rules. His gentle behavior to his brethren who sat with him and to the lawyers won him the respect and confidence of both. I am sure that the profession in my native State sincerely and deeply regret the great loss the Bench and Bar have sustained.

There is no need of a monument, carved or molded by human hands, to perpetuate the memory of such an one; for as long as the ambitious young lawyer in search of cases, or his more elderly brother, shall pore over the decisions of our highest Court, meeting now and then with masterly discussions of the principles of the law as traced by that hand, to-day pulseless and still, just so long will the name and fame of STANLEY MATTHEWS continue to live.

REMARKS OF MR. WILLIAM C. P. BRECKINRIDGE.

MR. CHAIRMAN: My own intercourse with Judge MATTHEWS was slight; but there are ties which connect men together in life, without personal association, which bound us so that our relations, whenever we met, were not only kindly, but cordial.

It so happened that his father was a professor in Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky., for some years during the early childhood of Judge MATTHEWS, and that during that time he was in daily association with a generation somewhat older than mine, but among whom were some of the warmest friends of my life. It also happened that he was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church of which my father and uncles were ministers for many years, and that he met with them in the courts of that Church, and there had grown up between him and my father a kindly friendship, which he transmitted to me when I came within the range of his personal acquaintance; so that, from the day I first began to study law, when he was a leading lawyer of Cincinnati, until the time of his death, I occasionally—probably half a dozen times a year—had the pleasure of greeting him, always on terms of cordiality.

It may be stated of Judge MATTHEWS, without seeming to do disrespect to his memory, that he never reached pre-eminence, and yet it is but severely just to say that he reached eminence in almost every department of active life in a new and growing community.

One of the thoughts which entered into my mind when I received invitation to be here today has been much better expressed by the gentleman from Ohio than I can do it; that in this growing western country there is necessarily produced by the necessities of a new and developing community versatility of gifts, for the population is not dense enough to make profitable special occupations, and so it falls upon those who develop the quality of leadership that they shall lead in various departments of activity; and the farther west we go and the newer the community, the rounder is the man who becomes leader.

There is nothing mysterious in Judge MATTHEWS' development. There was nothing unexpected in the many-sidedness which he exhibited in a life full of occupation and full of success; for while he did not reach the highest eminence of which he was capable, and of which he would have been the master if he had lived in an older community, so that the great ardor of his nature and the uncommon ability with which he was gifted would have been narrowed, as is narrowed and limited the Niagara River into closer and deeper channels, yet in the section in which he did work, it was necessary for him to know and do more things, to be acquainted readily and handily with more matters, so that on the spur of the moment and at the drop of the hat, he could take his place in the formative state of public opinion and lead it in those directions which he thought were right.

There is something extraordinary precious in having been born into a scholarly family; something sweet as well as valuable in your earliest memories going back to the familiar library shelves, to having reminiscences of silent playmates in the old books with which your father was in the habit of dealing and associating in your earliest childhood. There is an unconscious power of development in the atmosphere of literature and learning, precisely as a flower develops under the unconscious influence of light and sun. STANLEY MATTHEWS was born into the family of a learned and scholarly gentleman. His early life at Lexington was at a period when there was a great deal of intellectual activity; and we are not just when we think that the little children that are around our knees and that gather at the outskirts of a crowd do not develop under what they see and hear; that the years from five to eight or nine are not sometimes very important formative years. Judge MATTHEWS had also the opportunity, which I consider a very great one, of having been educated at a small college, where he came in daily contact with the professors, and was not told off by the head, to be taught by tutors; where he came in daily emulation with every member of his class, so that he had to contest with every intellectual gift, measure the strength and skill of every classmate.

It was fortunate in his development that he lived in Tennessee, and saw in his young manhood the civilization of that favored region, so that when he returned to his practice in Cincinnati he was a broader man, with broader views and broader opinions, than he would have been if he had grown up only in Ohio. And yet there is no State in which a man could have had a more varied development than in the State of Ohio from the time Judge MATTHEWS was born until the present time. Part of the State of Virginia, and its richest lands given by that State to her Revolutionary soldiers, settled as to other parts of the State by some of the best blood of New England, her early citizenship was of the best of Virginia and New England—for there is much in emigration which is a test of energy and life. They are not narrow men who come to a new country to build homes; and in laying the foundations of communities and building the superstructure of a State, much is inwrought into the men who do it, so that they become larger men; and Ohio, with her peculiar climate, gathered the best elements from the southern and eastern slopes of the Atlantic ocean. And, if I may say it with respect, it has been the State for the carpet-bagger. All her early leaders were carpet-baggers, and were engaged in a masterful contest, in which it was not asked, "Whence came you?" but where every man who showed himself fit for leadership was given leadership. Its civilization has been produced by this friendly but earnest contest, and the State has been so evenly divided in its politics that weak men have not been able to lead, no matter what adventitious circumstances might give them temporary standing.

Into this life STANLEY MATTHEWS, thus trained, entered, and soon fell under the power of a man that I judge was an able man; a man of vigor, a man of earnestness—Gamaliel Bailey; and this active, energetic youth, with a full physical life, large, robust, manly, and yet, withal, a loving, generous, ardent nature—under this influence developed qualities and obtained convictions which marked him from that time until his death. He acquired a certain large way of looking at things, a certain carelessness of the traditions and institutions of the past, yet with lovingness as to his race, so that while he might want the institutions destroyed, he felt kindly to the persons who were interested in those ancient institutions. I have no doubt that it was of very great benefit to him to have fallen under the power of Judge Chase. This intensified the impressions already received, and added a new force to the influences at work in the molding of his inner nature for his life work. It is impossible to estimate the precise value of daily companionship with a great and loving man. Thus did the ancients delight to educate, in its true and noble meaning, their sons; thus did Plato and Socrates teach; and thus did a diviner than Plato, a wiser than Socrates, train the disciples who were to bear witness—to be the martyrs.

Very soon the young lawyer began to be known; those who came in contact with him knew that prolonged life was the sole condition of assured success. Such a man was born to be a leader, for he had the gift of leadership in his magnificent physical manhood; in a face that was both attractive and impressive; in a full and ample rhetoric; in the power with which he stated his case before either court, jury, or popular audience; a pure private life; great industry and great capacity for labor; willing to risk his future not merely upon the convictions of his intellect, but the thought of the moment; not only willing to do what his duty required, but willing to risk his future upon the outgrowth of a temporary passion that might possess him. He was perhaps incapable of being a great and continued leader of a great party or the captain of a great army, but inevitably certain to be a leader of popular opinion, and beloved by those with whom he came in contact. Such a man necessarily went into the army, and went into it early. In that great contest such a man necessarily felt it was his duty to go at once, and such a man necessarily became a good, and necessarily failed to become a great, soldier. He was a man who on the battle-field would be attractive, in the camp would be lovable, in counsel wise; capable of great things, but incapable of sustained and continued self-control; incapable of that patient, meditative personal control of himself which is necessary to the greatest soldier.

If I may be pardoned the illustration of my conception of the necessary effects that his character produced upon his life, I might give it by what he did in 1872, as chairman of the Greeley convention; a man ready to break with his party if he thought it his duty to do so, and when what was done by his colleagues did not meet his approbation impatiently leaving them, and yet doing it all with such openness, such frankness, such evident honesty, that nobody ever denied or can deny the courage or the earnestness of the man.

I think Judge MATTHEWS, if he had been put upon the Bench early, like Story, would have developed into a very great judge. He may not have been so erudite, but I think that with his great capacity for labor, and with that quality that Judge Hoadly has called attention to, that higher power of imagination, which is not merely picturing to yourself some scene woven out of your own mind, but is the higher quality of identifying yourself with some other man's thoughts, and for the moment listening with his ears, feeling with his heart, and hoping with his aspirations, until you can deal with a record as if you saw standing before you—nay, standing within you—all the parties to that record, and can see through its pages the living thoughts of the various persons therein, so as to be able to decide what is in it, he would inevitably have attained the highest eminence. That is the greatest of the qualities of a great judge, and I think STANLEY MATTHEWS had that in an unusual degree.

The intellectual power of STANLEY MATTHEWS was shown in the great courts of the Presbyterian Church. A peculiar body, Mr. Chairman, is that General Assembly, gathered and dissolved every year, of the branch to which he belonged and to which I do not, consisting of over six hundred members, chosen by three hundred Presbyteries from many parts of the world, in which the parity of the minister with the layman is practically recognized. In one of these courts no man leads by force of position, and no man has the right to lead; he must lead because of himself and his power, because he knows what he is talking about and knows how to say it and when. And STANLEY MATTHEWS, without any pedigree of Calvinism, but a few years out of the Unitarian Church, stood among the ablest men of her assemblies, and held their ear and won their hearts. This was the triumph of pure intellect, dominated by an honest, intense ardor.

Busy indeed and very full had his years been: Lawyer, Editor, Judge—and then the great war—and Soldier; and then peace, and again Lawyer, Senator, Judge; always the hours packed with much—O, so much—of duty and labor and care. And yet, as from this side of the grave we see the broken end of his life, we cannot repress the sorrow at the loss of what might have been if only a few more had had rounded out those full but somewhat confused years.

In all the personal relations of life he lived such a life as make those who knew him best mourn him most, and from that sacred privacy I have no right to lift the curtain. In all the great contests of the last thirty years we have not agreed, and probably if we were to sit down and talk to-day we would still disagree. Amidst the calumnies of the press, amid the clamor of excited politicians, amid the great contests in which he bore his part, I always held him to be a pure gentleman, honestly trying as best he could to serve his country in his day and generation, so that he might carry through life a conscience void of offense to God and man; and I lay this tribute of my sincere admiration upon his new-made grave, with sorrow that he has left us, and yet with a certain sort of contentment at living in a generation of which he was but a fair type.

REMARKS OF MR. JOSEPH E. MCDONALD.

MR. CHAIRMAN: When I came here this morning, it was not my purpose to say anything except to give my assent to the resolutions that have been presented by the chairman of the committee, as they fully but briefly express my sentiments in relation to STANLEY MATTHEWS both as a man and as a judge. They will undoubtedly go upon the records of the Court of which he was a distinguished member, and will constitute an epitaph which the legal profession who are connected with the Bar of this Court inscribe to him; an epitaph much more lasting than that which is placed upon monuments of brass and of granite. The dust of time may gather upon the epitaph placed upon a metallic monument, but this will remain as long as the records of this Court remain.

There were one or two references made by the distinguished chairman of the committee who presented these resolutions, that have induced me to say one word or two with respect to STANLEY MATTHEWS; one of these was the calumny that was at one time sought to be attached to his name, growing out of the political contention of 1876–'77.

It happened to be my fortune to be placed under circumstances that enabled me to know how utterly baseless those charges were.

Immediately upon the announcement of the popular vote in 1876, it was known to the country that the Presidential election would turn upon the electoral votes of three Southern States, the States of Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida, and consequently the whole interest of the country was turned in the direction of those States. Those in control of the canvass on each side requested certain persons to visit those States for the purpose of giving personal inspection to the canvass of the votes as far as possible. Judge MATTHEWS went at the call of his party to Louisiana; I went at the call of mine to the same place. We met there on the same day; remained there during the same length of time, and returned home on the same train.

The calumny that was afterwards sought to be attached to his name grow out of his connection with affairs there, and, while of course I did not know everything that transpired, I knew enough to know that any charge against his integrity or his honor was absolutely groundless; and I have taken occasion on every opportunity that has presented itself so to declare. I have thought it right and proper to take this last occasion—the last, perhaps, when this subject will ever be brought forward—to say that the chairman of the committee on resolutions did not characterize that slander in terms too strong.

The other reference made by the chairman was the circumstance of the nomination of STANLEY MATTHEWS as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court and the objection that nomination met with in the Senate.

Of course I am not here to speak of what transpired in the executive session of that body, of which I was then a member, nor in the committee to which was sent this nomination, of which I was also a member. But as the chairman of the committee has frankly stated his position upon that subject, a position that I know to be true in all its essential particulars, I may also say that I, on the other hand, occupied exactly the adverse position. I believed in STANLEY MATTHEWS; I believed that he was an honest man, and I knew that he was an able lawyer, for I had had more than one opportunity of forming that judgment. I had known his reputation for many years before I met him; I met him many years before his nomination came before the Senate for consideration.

I made his personal acquaintance on that memorable occasion, so eloquently referred to by my friend from Kentucky, Mr. Breckinridge, when Judge MATTHEWS commenced the day presiding over the Liberal Republican Convention which met at Cincinnati in 1872 and nominated Horace Greeley, and closed it by seceding from it when that nomination was made. In both acts he was actuated in the highest sense by the voice of conscience.

When his name, therefore, came before us, I was not only gratified that he had been nominated, but, so far as I was able, did everything in my power to confirm him, and regretted that the expiration of my term prevented me from registering my vote in favor of his confirmation when his name was again presented to the Senate at its next session.

But, Mr. Chairman, his record here in this Court will stand as a vindication of the wisdom of his appointment, and is as gratifying, I have no doubt, to the distinguished chairman of the committee who has so frankly stated that for a time he doubted whether he ought to be confirmed, as to those, like myself, who were for his confirmation from the beginning.

The great loss that this country has sustained is that he has not been permitted to remain longer in the position he was so well qualified to fill.

All that is in our power to do we have done, by submitting these resolutions to be placed on the record of the Court.

REMARKS OF MR. EVARTS.

Before asking your assent to these resolutions proposed by the committee, I may be permitted to occupy the few moments that are left to this meeting; for it would be unjust to myself, from the close relations between Judge MATTHEWS and myself during his life and my sorrow at his death, to take only a formal share in this commemoration.

STANLEY MATTHEWS was very well known to me as an eminent lawyer for a good many years before it was my fortune to make his personal acquaintance or to meet him or be associated with him in any forensic debates. He was known to me, as to the Bar of the great State of New York and to most of the Eastern lawyers distinguished in their careers, quite as much and perhaps quite as justly as he was known to the Bar of Cincinnati and of the Mississippi Valley. When, therefore, it came to be a question whether political, official, or judicial honors should await his acceptance, there was no need of diffusing his repute among us.

Personally I came into association with him for the first time in the august tribunal of the Electoral Commission, and from that moment until his death our friendship and our estimates, reciprocally, have not been changed at all. I will not dwell upon that great disputation beyond this observation: that in the very grave constitutional and administrative questions that were to be considered before that Commission, it was for Mr. MATTHEWS to take up the first in order of the political systems of the States that were to be there discussed and disposed of, to lay down the principles which must hold as authority through the successive contests. It was for Mr. MATTHEWS to open that discussion. The subject of inquiry, as it appeared to the profession, to public men, to the judges, to the popular mind, seemed dark, seemed doubtful, and it was in all respects novel. I need not say in this presence how profound was the immediate impression and how permanent the esteem of his argument in these debates. It preserved its predominant place on the side of which he was the champion until the close of the whole discussion.

Our acquaintance thus commenced, my residence during the administration of President Hayes in Washington, and Mr. MATTHEWS' presence in the Senate for two years, brought us in constant intercourse. When he came to be a judge, taking his seat here under his commission, dated I think in May, 1881, until his retirement a year ago from an active share in the labors of the Court, occasionally I came before him as an advocate, and during the year of his seclusion and decline, when the infirmities of our nature were getting the better of his great spirit and his noble strength, at every interval that I could be permitted to enjoy that opportunity I was at his bedside. In this intercourse, public and familiar, I can find no reason to qualify the affectionate views, so eloquent and so just, that on every side have been expressed at this meeting.

Judge MATTHEWS was a noble figure in all the affairs of our public and our common interests in this country. He was a noble figure in the dignity of his person and the grace of his demeanor. He was a noble figure in this great profession, upon whose powers, upon whose independence, upon whose intrepidity such vast interests of society, of government, of the administration of justice hang. He was a noble figure, for he proved himself so, in that great soldiery of the common people, in which he volunteered to fight his share in the great contest upon which turned the future of this country. He was a noble figure in the Senate, where he showed himself a master of parliamentary debate. From the time that he took his seat here he was a noble figure to the Court, to the profession, and to the laws of this country in every aspect in which a judge's opinions and decisions are to be considered.

Take, now, the brief seven years of his service here, from 1881 till 1889, which determine the time of his actual presence on this Bench. In the twenty-five volumes of reports, from the 104th to the 128th, inclusive, we have a deposit of as good, as sound, as just, as perfect an exposition of the doctrine of our Constitution, of our Government, of the justice of the society in which we live, of right between man and man, as can be found in any equal record of any judge. And when we consider the amplitude of these researches, the magnitude of the questions, and the care and completeness with which every one of them was treated and expounded by him, we cannot but feel that if there have been more celebrated judges in this land and in this Court, no one can say that, if his judicial life and power had not been broken in the seventh year of his service, had he continued on this Bench for seven years more, and seven years more, and even seven years more—which term some of our great judges had filled out—he might not have been as great, as eminent, and as assured in growth and predominance as any of his predecessors.

But STANLEY MATTHEWS was as well a noble figure in all great interests and duties which elevate and dignify and purify our society. As a man, as a husband, as a father, as a Christian, as a leader in every organized form of social influence, no question and no variation or shadow of turning was found in him in this greatest sphere, the sphere of character and the sphere of the welfare of society.

I ask now your attention to these resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and thereupon,

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, the meeting adjourned.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MONDAY, April 15, 1889.

Present: The Hon. MELVILLE W. FULLER,
Chief Justice.
SAMUEL F. MILLER,
STEPHEN J. FIELD,
JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
JOHN M. HARLAN,
HORACE GRAY,
SAMUEL BLATCHFORD,
LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR,
Associate Justices.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL addressed the court as follows:

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT: At a meeting of the Bar of this Court, on the 6th instant, resolutions were adopted touching the death of the late Justice MATTHEWS. These resolutions, as the representative of the Department of Justice, of which STANLEY MATTHEWS, both at the Bar and on the Bench, was so conspicuous an ornament, I was directed to present to this Court.

I beg leave to read the resolutions:

Resolved, That the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States deeply deplores the decease of the late Mr. Justice MATTHEWS, whereby the country has lost an always patriotic and respected citizen, alike eminent in his private and public career; the Bar one of its long-time leaders, conspicuous as an example of the best relations of our profession with the administration of justice; and the Court itself a member fitted by character, temperament, learning, and industry to the place he held in the highest judicial tribunal of a great nation. His name is rightly enrolled among those honored by their countrymen.

Resolved, That the Bar presents to the family of the departed Justice its sincere sympathy and condolence in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to present these resolutions to the Court for such consideration as may be fit.

Resolved, That the chairman be requested to transmit a copy hereof to Mrs. Matthews.

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT: In this august presence all human visitors stand uncovered and bow with reverence. But now and again your precincts are invaded by the herald of a Power which knows no rank or dignity, in whose Court magistrate and private citizen, jurist and rustic, are upon a plane of absolute equality.

Answering the summons of this Power, your eminent associate, a worthy successor of the long line of illustrious men whose virtues and learning have adorned this great tribunal, has gone to that country whose mystery, so far as human effort is concerned, is no nearer solution than when in the childhood of the race Death snatched a brother's life by a brother's hand, or when the Poet King, bewailing his child, said all that can now be said, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." We mourn the departure of your associate, our brother, not for his own, but for the country's sake. True, his life has gone out when at the zenith of its brightness.

While not a young man, Justice MATTHEWS was upheld by a spirit so buoyant, mastered difficult questions and wrote great decisions so easily, that no one thought of him as old in years.

It is the dull, uneventful day which drags and seems long. The day or the life full of great thoughts crystallizing into great deeds seems always too short.

Even the Pagan had a better measure of life than years. Seneca says:

> We must not care for length of life, but for life sufficient for its duties. Life is long if it is full; but it is full when the soul hath completed its development and hath shown all its latent powers.

Measured by this standard, the life we mourn had no further need of years on earth.

For ourselves and the country, we regret that we could not have the benefit of further exertions of his splendid powers; but for himself, his life was full.

He has gone over to the majority; to the majority of the great and good of all time; to the majority of the associates of his early life, the period in which most lasting attachments are formed; to the majority of his own kindred; to the majority, I had almost said, of those who, as associates, extended to him the hand of welcome when he first took his seat as a Justice of this Court.

My personal acquaintance with Judge MATTHEWS was slight. While he was at the Bar I occasionally met him, but only as a young man at the Bar meets a great lawyer; since he has been upon the Bench I have only seen him in the discharge of his high duties. Of his personality, therefore, it does not become me to speak.

Nor is this the time, nor am I the person, to indulge in extended eulogy on his career and character. Others, better fitted by intimate personal and professional association and by gifts of speech, have already performed this pleasing duty. This much, however, I may say in the way of characterization. The mind of STANLEY MATTHEWS seemed to me to be deeply original. He pioneered. He studied principles more than precedents; he surveyed the field of jurisprudence with the eye of a statesman as well as lawyer; he took his direction in the law by the compass and the stars, rather than by uncertain foot-prints or marks on the trees blazed by his predecessors.

In conclusion, I ask that the resolutions of the Bar be spread at large on your records, as a memorial to our children of our high appreciation of the virtues, learning, and eminent character of our departed brother.

THE CHIEF-JUSTICE responded as follows:

The Court entirely concurs in the sentiments expressed in the resolutions which have just been read and in the observations of the Attorney-General accompanying their presentation.

Before he came to grace a seat upon this Bench, Mr. Justice MATTHEWS had, in high public place, political, professional, and judicial, acquired eminent distinction and displayed the qualities which invite attention and command admiration and respect; while as a member of the Bar his conspicuous ability, faithfulness, and integrity had given him a rank second to none; and the felicity was also his of having rendered his country gallant service as a soldier.

He brought here the garnered wisdom of years of varied experience, and constantly added to it the fruit of cultivation in this exalted field of exertion, whose margin faded before him as he moved, growing in strength with exigencies requiring the putting forth of all his powers.

In listening, patient and sympathetic; in intercourse with counsel, cordial but dignified; conscientious in investigation; honest and impartial in judgment; full of resource in supporting given conclusions by accurate and discriminating reasoning; ample in learning and comprehensive in scholarship; luminous in exposition and apt in illustration, he demonstrated such fitness for this sphere of action, that his removal in the midst of his usefulness cannot but be regarded as a severe loss to the Bar, the Judiciary, and the Country.

To the associates of years of personal companionship in the administration of justice that loss is quite unspeakable. The ties between those thus thrown into close intimacy are extremely strong; and when one is taken away upon whose painstaking scrutiny, clearness in explanation, and fullness of knowledge, reliance has been justly reposed by his brethren, and whose amenity of temper and kindliness of heart have naturally inspired affection a keen sense of personal bereavement mingles with the common sorrow.

In view of a life like this, crowned with the success that waits upon absolute devotion to duty, how false the desponding exclamation of the Preacher, that "That which now is, in the days to become shall all be forgotten."

The remembrance of the just and the wise is with the generation always, and the works of this faithful public servant will follow him, "in the days to come," now that he rests from his labors.

The Court has heretofore adjourned as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and attended the funeral ceremonies in Ohio. The resolutions just presented and the remarks of the Attorney-General will be spread upon the records, and the tribute of the Bar of Saint Louis, which has been transmitted to the Court, and such other commemorative proceedings as may be received, will be placed upon the files, with a proper minute in regard to them.

APPENDIX VII.

In Memoriam.

JOHN ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL,*

DIED MARCH 18, 1889.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BENCH AND BAR OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

SATURDAY, April 6, 1889.

THE Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States and the Officers of the Court met in the Court Room, in the Capitol, at two o'clock. The meeting was called to order by Mr. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, on whose motion Mr. GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS was called to the Chair, and Mr. JAMES H. MCKENNEY elected Secretary.

Mr. MAURY: Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a tribute to the memory of Judge CAMPBELL, prepared for this occasion by a distinguished gentleman [Mr. GARLAND], who is unfortunately prevented from being with us today by a visitation in his family, and the lateness of the hour prompts me to move that the usual form of appointing a Committee to prepare matter for the action of the meeting be dispensed with, and that I be permitted to present at once, for the consideration of the meeting, the tribute to which I have referred.

The Chairman put the question as to the adoption of Mr. Maury's motion, and it was carried unanimously.

Mr. MAURY: I will now, Mr. Chairman, read what has been prepared for the action of the meeting:

Resolutions.

The Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States have assembled for the purpose of giving expression to their sense of the loss which they, in common with the whole country, have sustained in the death of JOHN ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

It is but just to his memory to say that he was a jurist of extensive and varied learning in the common law, and civil law as well, and accustomed to resort to the great sources of jurisprudence, which are the school, we are told, where proficiency can best be acquired in the difficult art of applying the abstract principles of the law to actual cases.

His learning in constitutional law and in international law, and his large acquaintance with the political history of the country, added to his vast reading in general history and literature, fitted him admirably to sit in the Supreme Court of the United States, where for nearly eight years he was an honored and influential associate: Therefore be it resolved—

1. That the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States do hereby attest their admiration and appreciation of the great career of JOHN ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL as a leading practicing lawyer and as a judge of the first rank, and do hereby commemorate his many public and private virtues, and that modesty and simplicity which were the chaste setting of his great intellect and learning.

2. That we tender the family of the deceased our sympathy; and that the Chairman be, and he is hereby, requested to send them a copy of these proceedings.

3. That the Chairman be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of these proceedings to the Attorney-General of the United States, with the request to present the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for such action as may be deemed proper.

REMARKS OF MR. WILLIAM A. MAURY.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Although there are others here better qualified to speak of the merits of the eminent man whose death we lament, it would be hardly fitting in me to let the occasion pass without at least a few words of reference to his career at the Bar, and on the Bench, as I may say I was numbered among those who had the honor to enjoy some share of his friendship and confidence.

I do not think there is room for difference of opinion on the point that Judge CAMPBELL has had few, if any, equals at the American Bar as a profound and philosophical jurist; as a jurist who was continually giving vigor and breadth to his intellect by resorting to the great sources of the Roman law, which are the surest means for imparting the difficult art of applying with precision the principles of the law to actual cases, as we are told by Demangeat and Savigny, who, although perhaps somewhat prone to regard the fragments of Paul and Papinian with the enthusiasm felt by a sculptor towards the remains of some masterpiece of Grecian art that has come down to us, must nevertheless be accepted as great authorities whose opinions can not be lightly passed over. Indeed, I think it will be admitted by all who have paid any attention to Judge CAMPBELL'S opinions and arguments, that this particular sort of training, to which I refer, increased the natural powe of his mind immensely, and furnished him with a wealth of illustration that made his discussions an invaluable assistance to the courts, especially in cases involving great questions of the first impression.

I trust, sir, that I may be pardoned for a further allusion to Judge CAMPBELL as a civilian for the purpose of saying that his career ought not to be without influence in promoting the cultivation of the civil law as a branch of legal education in this country. There can be no doubt that there is a tendency in that direction both here and in England, induced, it may be, by the few books to be found on the shelves of the common-law practitioner which treat the law in a philosophical, scientific way. It is to give the mind the philosophical cast or habit of thinking that the civil law may be used with undoubted profit. And I may add, that it seems to me our only safety, in the midst of the great multiplication of law books of the present day —"that codeless myriad of precedent," "that wilderness of single instances"—a multiplication which bids fair to provoke some such intemperate action as that taken by the Emperor Justinian, when he prohibited the writing of books or commentaries of any kind on his codification; a multiplication which threatens to bury from sight the principles of the law, pretty much as Pompeii and Herculaneum were buried under lava and ashes—a multiplication, allow me to repeat, in which our only safety is to be found in the scientific study of jurisprudence, in the mastery of its great leading principles, in the habit of contemplating it as a whole, with its parts fitted to one another in beautiful harmony, and not like the stones of a broken mosaic, scattered hither and thither, giving no idea of the perfect and artistic whole that once delighted the eye. It is in precisely this disorderly state that the despairing student contemplates the disjecta membra of the common law in Coke on Littleton and other books of great authority—"those rough mines of hidden treasure"—and finds himself in no mood to say, as Lord Chancellor Finch did of the earlier and ill-edited edition of Hobart's Reports, that they were "beautiful even in confusion."

Mr. Chairman, the years as they roll around must be expected to bring with their blessings a large admixture of trouble, but it is an unusual visitation on any people, however prolific in great men, that has consigned to the grave in the span of the same twelvemonth such men as MORRISON REMICK WAITE, STANLEY MATTHEWS, and JOHN ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

When such men are laid in the dust, there comes over us a feeling akin to despair; for it is impossible that they should have left behind them one tithe of what their capabilities could have achieved. As Lord Coke says somewhere, in his lamentation over the death of Littleton, a great and learned man is a long time in making, and when he dies much learning dies with him, and it makes one's courage flag when he reflects that hardly has the mind reached the highest point of development, when the shadow of the coming night of death begins to dim its path. Deducting from the allotted span of life the time it takes to make a jurist, and how little is left for the fruition! How disproportionate are the results to the preparation!

"The lyfe so short, the craft so long to learn."

It was some such reflection as this that caused Buckle to pause in despair in the midst of his work and fall to moralizing upon the emptiness of human hopes in words that will always be regarded as among the most beautiful and touching in the English language, and that caused the Roman poet to ask why, in our hardihood, we attempt to execute vast undertakings in the brief period of a career on earth.

But, after all, it may be the evidence that a divinity warms this obstruction of clay, and that we are destined for a state where the soul, released from the chrysalis of the flesh, may range unconfined by either time or place, I repeat that it may be the evidence of this that men, blind to the lesson of mortality, have in all ages continued to struggle for the unattainable—

Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp,
Or what's a heaven for?

It was a great loss to the Supreme Court when Judge CAMPBELL and Judge Curtis left it. They were to some extent the complements of one another, somewhat as Marshall and Story were, and of course no court could lose so much mental vigor and learning as they represented without feeling deeply the deprivation.

It may be also said that both of these Judges did the best work of their professional lives after they returned to the bar. This was certainly true of Judge CAMPBELL.

It was in the Slaughter-House Cases and in the suits brought by the States of New York and New Hampshire, respectively, against the State of Louisiana that Judge CAMPBELL most impressed himself on the Supreme Court.

In the Slaughter-House Cases he seemed to have levied a contribution on the literature and learning of the world to enable him to show the intolerance of the common law of monopolies and to furnish authentic examples of the almost infinite devices by which the strong have in all countries and in all ages managed to destroy or curtail the right of every individual to exercise his faculties in any way that might seem good in his own eyes, saving, of course, the rights of others, as a basis for his powerful contention that while African slavery, as it had existed in the Southern States, was the occasion for the provision of the Constitution putting an end to slavery or involuntary servitude, the language of the Constitution had a scope far beyond the occasion that caused its use, and applied to all attempts to frustrate the Heaven-descended right of every man to exercise his faculties in his own way.

Upon the basis of the same researches he contended with equal force that the Slaughter-house law was a denial to all persons, not the grantees of the monopoly, of the equal protection of the laws, and therefore a violation of still another Federal guaranty against State oppression.

As the arguments of Sir Samuel Romilly in Huguenin v. Baseley and Sir John Scott (afterwards Lord Eldon) in Ackroyd v. Smithson, have made those cases memorable, so will the argument of Judge CAMPBELL in the Slaughter-House Cases always figure conspicuously in them. It is but to look at almost any page of the opinion of any of the Judges who spoke on that occasion to see what a profound impression was made by the great advocate battling against the stupendous monopoly that had grasped the invidious power to compel every man within a large area of country who had a beast to slaughter for food to come to its slaughter-house to do his butchering.

When we look at the reach and extent of the research and learning displayed by Judge CAMPBELL in that case, it may well be asked if ever that great Court in all its history had witnessed at its bar in any previous case more, if so much, learning. Not even in McCulloch's Case—that battle of the giants—nor in the case of The Nereide, where Chief Justice Marshall, carried away by admiration even to forgetting somewhat the severity of the judgment seat, burst forth in that splendid eulogium of the rhetoric of Mr. Pinkney.*

In the cases against Louisiana Judge CAMPBELL displayed the same remarkable ability and research as he had shown in the Slaughter-House Cases, argued some years before. He left nothing to be said or desired on the rationale of governmental exemption from suit. I may say, without the slightest impropriety, I hope, touching his argument in those cases, that I heard a member of the Court before which they were argued, but who was not, however, one of its members when the Slaughter-House Cases were before it, say, that Judge CAMPBELL's argument in the Louisiana Cases was the greatest he had heard since he had been a member of the Court; and this was the sense of every member of the Court, as I have some reason to suppose.

The only opinion of his, as a member of the Supreme Court, that I shall stop to refer to—having already extended these remarks beyond what was my purpose—is his dissenting opinion in the case of Florida v. Georgia, which I mention somewhat because it contains views that bear directly on the question involved in the Louisiana Cases, and because of the originality and force of those views, uttered so many years before his great argument in those cases. In that opinion he seems to show so clearly that the judicial power, as extended to controversies between a State and a citizen of another State, did not admit of the construction given it by the Supreme Court in Chisholm v. Georgia, that we feel inclined to wonder how the Court in that case came to entertain, as it did, a suit by a citizen of one State against another State without the latter's consent. Perhaps the view of the Constitution opposed to that of the Court in Chisholm's Case, namely, that the mere fact of extending the judicial power to controversies between a State and the citizens of other States did not warrant the inference that the Constitution meant to give a right to sue where one did not already exist in the case mentioned, has, not been better stated than by Judge Campbell in that dissenting opinion, where it comes in by way of incident and illustration, which I say, that it may be quite evident I am not presuming to criticise what was laid down by the majority of the Court.

It is well for the younger members of the profession to remember that the success of Judge Campbell at the Bar was the result of patient, laborious industry. He went to the bottom of everything that required his attention, and shrank from no drudgery that was necessary to accomplish his purposes. He has sometimes playfully confronted me with the evidences of his tremendous industry, as if to say that researches that might appal younger men had no terrors for him! Yes, sir, it was mainly by labor, incessant labor, that he stood first at the Bar.

His reading, however, was by no means confined to the law, but had a far wider range, embracing the discussions of the day on almost all topics. Indeed, his mind seemed capable of receiving and assimilating everything that came in its way, and, as a consequence, his retentive memory grew to be a vast store-house of useful, curious, and entertaining matter, making his conversation deeply interesting and greatly diversified, when he was inclined to talk, which was not always the case. Any one who has ever heard him give his reminiscences of public men and of the stirring events that happened in his time will agree in what I say about the charm of his conversation, with its admixture of humor, which latter a stranger would never have supposed to exist behind that cold, abstracted expression which he generally wore in public.

But these remarks would be inexcusably imperfect if I did not say a word or two about the exalted character of Judge CAMPBELL—a character so exalted and so influential as to suggest the remark of Horace, in his beautiful comparison between the authority of Virtue and that of the Magistrate, that Virtue, unlike the Magistrate, neither takes up nor lays down the insignia of her power at the will of the fickle populace:

> Nec sumit, aut ponit secures
> Arbitrio popularis aurae.

Nor must I omit here a special reference to the loveliness of his home life, and his tender watchfulness over those who made up his household, and for whom and not for himself (for there was no tincture of selfishness about him) he employed his great powers. His happiness consisted in using his bountiful hand to promote the happiness of others.

Permit me now to add something I have in writing from one of the greatest of living jurists, one, sir, who adorns the Bench you at present occupy as Chairman, and who says of Judge CAMPBELL (I give the very words of the writing before me): "He was one of the most interesting persons I ever knew. Great in learning, far-reaching in thought, simple in manner, most instructive in discourse. Where is his equal now to be found?"

*It may interest the reader to have before him the very words used by the Chief Justice on that occasion, so we give them: "With a pencil dipped in the most vivid colors, and guided by the hand of a master, a splendid portrait has been drawn, exhibiting this vessel and her freighter as forming a single figure, composed of the most discordant materials of peace and war. So exquisite was the skill of the artist, so dazzling the garb in which the figure was presented, that it required the exercise of that cold investigating faculty which ought always to belong to those who sit on this bench, to discover its only imperfection; its want of resemblance."

And here let me say that I have little, if any, doubt that the bond between these two great men—for there was a strong bond between them—was that "communication in studies" which, we have Lord Bacon's authority for saying, is stronger than "near alliance and strict friendship and society." I am happy, sir, to be able to state at this point, without invading, I hope, in the smallest degree, the privileges of the living, that I have in my possession conclusive evidence that Judge CAMPBELL's opinion as to the character and judicial ability of the writer of the words above quoted was fully as flattering as anything those words convey.

Something reminds me here at the very close of my remarks that I have occupied a good deal of time without saying a word about the places where Judge CAMPBELL resided in his long career; but I am not surprised at the omission, for it is not likely to occur to one to associate locality with a mind of such a range as his. I must be pardoned if, in portraying so great a man, I thought of him as belonging to the world of jurisprudence and regarded it as almost a derogation to seem to localize him by entering into such particulars. Bolingbroke was one day descanting on Marlborough's many admirable qualities, when some one let fall a word about his avarice. "He was so great a man," rejoined Bolingbroke, "that I forgot he had that defect." I may say with perfect truth that I had really forgotten, as almost irrelevant to my theme, the facts as to Judge CAMPBELL's residence at different times of his life, and am unable, if I would, to go into the matter.

Let me, before I take my seat, refer to the religious side of Judge CAMPBELL's character; in other words, to what one who knew him well and possessed his entire confidence, describes as "the ardent Christian faith which silently prepared him for the unseen world;" for, sir, it must always be a subject of interest to know, especially in this authentic way, that the old faith found acceptance with that far-reaching, investigating mind. Can anything be better calculated than this fact to inspire with reverence for that faith even those who account it a bondage from which the mind should be released, or can anything be better calculated to make those stand in pause who would lay the axe at the root of that faith without offering anything to take its place, or, to say the very least, without offering anything that the average mind can regard as at all equivalent? Surely, sir, the lesson of this occasion is that a man should think long before coming to the conclusion that Christianity has ceased to have a raison d'être in the world, and that, if he should reach a conclusion, he should, with a natural distrust of its soundness, keep it to himself and not assume the tremendous responsibility of attempting to make shipwreck of the faith of others, remembering that Christianity has not reached the low ebb of paganism when one augur could not look another in the face without smiling.

I will conclude what I have to say by referring to a touching incident that happened not many days before his death, and while he was in his last illness; an incident which shows that the flame of his affection for the Supreme Court still burnt with undiminished luster. In replying to the invitation extended to him by the Court, through its Marshal, to attend the inauguration ceremonies along with it he said: "Tell the Court that I join daily in the prayer, 'God save the United States and [its] honorable Court.'"

Mr. EDMUNDS: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to occupy the time of this meeting with any observations which will be much better made by other gentlemen, for Mr. Justice CAMPBELL had departed from his scene of usefulness here before I came to this Bar. But I find that his friend and the Rector of his Church in Baltimore has come over this stormy day to attend this meeting, of course as a spectator and listener; but under the circumstances I think it would be of interest to us all if I might ask that we depart from our usual course of confining these observations to members of the Bar of the Court, to ask general consent that the Rev. Mr. Powell, Rector of Grace Church, in Baltimore, of which Judge CAMPBELL was a communicant, and a friend of Judge CAMPBELL, may be invited to make some observations.

The request of Mr. Edmunds was unanimously agreed to, and Mr. Powell was asked to address the meeting.

REMARKS OF REV. ARTHUR CHILTON POWELL.

Mr. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN: It can hardly fall within my province, so young a man am I, to speak of that public career which the honorable ex-Justice so nobly and so conspicuously filled before the country and at this Bar as a member of this august Court.

It was my privilege to know him in the latter days of his life, to enter somewhat into the fruition of his hopes and of his plans, to see the culmination of his character, to observe the richness and the ripeness, the beauty and dignity, of his sterling honorable old age, and I must say, and I take great pleasure in saying it here to those of you who knew him perchance in his public career in those stormy days when conflict and antagonisms prevailed, that of all men whom I ever saw it seems to me that no one possessed in himself so much purity, so much conscientiousness, so much rectitude, and at the same time so much Christian simplicity as did the honorable man whose memory we here commemorate.

I shall speak, Mr. Chairman, as is becoming me, first of that faith, so clear, so strong, so childlike, which characterized him. In his last days, though conspicuous all his life for his presence in the house of God, after diligent study and examination he was not ashamed to receive the imposition of hands and to confess his Master before men. In the ripeness of all his years he laid at the feet of Jesus of Nazareth his manhood, with all its varied and rich attainments, and confessed in Him his Lord and Saviour. He was laid to rest from the beautiful church in which he loved to worship his God, but a short time ago, with all the dignity and all the beauty which the Church could throw around that sacred event, mourned by all who knew him, reverenced and respected even by those who bitterly opposed his course in civil affairs, and by his death made all to realize that there had fallen a master and a prince in our national Israel.

In the province of his own home, perhaps no man was more conspicuous for those sterling and those common graces and gifts that mark our highest and our most characteristic national manhood. He was a man of strong domestic nature, a man of pure and holy affection, a man whose life, notwithstanding its remarkable activity, seemed to find its joy and inspiration in the quietude and seclusion of his own home. It was indeed not only a pleasure but a privilege to enter that charmed circle where this rare old man, with his frosted head, with his genial manner, and with his mild grace, bade you welcome to enjoy that which he had most to give and which he most loyally dispensed, the kindness and generosity and at the same time the tenderness of ripened manhood.

I lay here before you, and in this place where he was accustomed to sit, the chaplet of affectionate esteem. He has left us the memory of one of God's true noblemen, ashamed of nothing save perchance of wrong and dishonor, which never, even in his most public days, attached themselves to him, and whatever may have been his course—regarding which there may have been diverse opinions—in his own conscience and before the bar of his own soul he pursued the straight and narrow path of high, dignified, and consecrated manhood.

I thank, you, gentlemen, for this honor, and I am sure it will be very deeply appreciated by his family, especially by those daughters who are so sorely bereaved, having now been left parentless, and who mourn the departure of him whom they never shall see again until they shall join him beyond the stream.

REMARKS OF MR. GEORGE HOADLEY.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I desire that my voice should unite in the expression of sorrow at the grave of JOHN A. CAMPBELL.

The occasion is most unusual and pathetic. We have met on the saddest of the sad days of the year to render a tribute of respect to the last survivor of the Supreme Court which sat before the war; to the last survivor of that company of giants over which Roger B. Taney presided, and which included among other members Nelson and Grier; and among them primus, not only inter pares but inter omnes, your honored brother Benjamin Robbins Curtis.

Appointed to the Bench when only forty-one years of age at the solicitation of the Judges of the Court—the most honorable method in which such an appointment could come—Judge CAMPBELL lived twenty-eight years beyond the date of his resignation—lived to see his country reunited, and the great nation, in labors for whose jurisprudence he took such patriotic pride, rejuvenated and renewed. Notwithstanding years passed in the uncongenial service of Assistant Secretary of War of the Confederate States, his later life was not sorrowful in contemplation of the fact that the hopes of his warlike career, if such it may be called, had been frustrated, and that all portions of the country were again united under the ancient banner which he once represented as a Judge of this Court.

I knew him well, as the defeated knows the conqueror, for in two of the most memorable cases of my life I was the captive of his bow and spear.

In two protracted litigations carried on in more than one Southern State, and finally ending here, I became at last the sufferer at his hands of defeats, in one of which five Judges of this court cast an affirmative vote and four a negative. This was my only and my very slight comfort, besides the worth of my antagonist.

In long discussions, which, beginning at Memphis, carried us to Mobile and finally here, I became his friend, and many an otherwise tedious hour during that association has he beguiled in high discourse of the fall of Richmond, in which city he remained the sole surviving representative of the Confederate Government after all others had fled; of the attempts at peace made with Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Seward, at Hampton Roads, and of his services in this court.

I shall repeat one statement which he made me; I feel free to do so, because it was of public events, and not in any confidence of private friendship, and because it is grateful to me in this presence to say what Judge CAMPBELL told me of Benjamin R. Curtis. He said that Judge Curtis was great in the chair of justice, great in the opinions which he reported, but that if in those days there had been a stenographer in the conference-room to take down his language, when his views were called for in the councils of his brethren, so great was his power of statement, so fruitful the meditation which it was his duty and pleasure to give to every case, that his great reputation would have been founded not so much on his reported opinions or professional arguments, as on the counsel and advice he gave to his associates in cases in which the opinions of the court were reported by other Judges.

Judge CAMPBELL was a man of noble presence, and, until his powers began to fail with increasing age, of great physical power. His tall form, his dignified and impressive presentment, called for immediate respect, even before the weighty argument required assent.

He combined in an unusual degree the knowledge of the Roman law and the common law. Familiar with the laws of Louisiana and Texas and the civil-law system which is the foundation of their jurisprudence, he knew as well the common law which prevails in the other States. How well he performed his duties, how fully he fulfilled the expectation of the members of the Court who solicited his appointment, I need not say. Nearly thirty years have passed since he wrote his last opinion in this Court, but we all know him, as history has recorded him, as a grave, serious, careful, clear, logical, persuasive expounder of the law. As such his fame will go down to many generations yet to come.

I had once occasion to submit to a Justice of this Court an entry to be made in a case in which Judge Matthews, then a member of the Senate, was upon the other side. The Justice was my friend as well as my Judge. I sent him my entry, and he wrote me in reply that he took it with him into the Senate to show to Matthews, and finding the Senate engaged, he sat listening to the debate for an hour and a half before he could secure Judge Matthews' attention, and then he added, probably provoked by the fact that the proposition under debate was of trivial consequence, "How trifling seem the results of the work of the greatest American Legislature compared with the lasting influence which attaches to the judgments of the Court of which I am a member." I wrote him in reply that I had seen in Venice, around the frieze of the large room in the Doge's palace, the names, with a single exception, of all the Doges of Venice—great men in their day and generation, to whose hands had been committed, each for a little time, the power of the Republic. I said: "These men are forgotten. Not half a dozen names of those hundreds are remembered or ever mentioned now. In history only the victor Doges, or those in whose hands was the government of Venice during hours of extreme perplexity or prosperity, appear; and so it will be with us. The time will come when the Presidents of our Republic will be numbered by hundreds. Great as his high office may seem during the brief tenure of power allotted to each, they will nevertheless be very obscure persons indeed when compared with the men to whom was vouchsafed the opportunity of recording in judicial judgment decisions of lasting import, upon which depend the lives, liberty and property of those generations, as well as of ages to follow." To-day Lord Coke's memory is greatfully preserved by every American lawyer, while even the names of the prime ministers of James the First have been forgotten. Surely among the men who have thus served their generation usefully and wisely the name of JOHN A. CAMPBELL will not be the least.

REMARKS OF MR. WILLIAM M. EVARTS.

MR. CHAIRMAN: It is my good fortune to have been admitted to this Bar some years before Mr. CAMPBELL became one of the Judges, and my first argument here, which was some years after that admission, was made before him, in a case of much legal interest, being in its controversy inter apices juris, and much dividing the Court. My first personal acquaintance with Judge CAMPBELL was then formed, and from that time until his withdrawal from this Court our relations were, on my part, of the most respectful nature towards him. From the time of the close of the war I early was brought into new intercourse with him, not only professional but personal, as we would meet in this Court or in social circles in which we moved.

Judge CAMPBELL was a very great lawyer. His repute had long been established with the Southern Bar very clearly, as that of an eminent lawyer in the sense of juridical power and of philosophical and constitutional accuracy and strength. After taking his seat here he commended himself to the Northern Bar and to all the forensic disputants before the court as entirely adequate to the most arduous and responsible determinations of this court. I think the Bar, therefore, felt it with a sensible regret and as a withdrawal of strength from this Court when he was no longer counted among its Judges. If that opinion was entertained at that time, I am quite sure I am right in saying that, in the observation by the profession and by the public of Mr. CAMPBELL'S career as a member of the Bar, on his return to practice in this Court they felt even an increased regret that his great powers and his supreme integrity of nature and of intellect had been permanently lost to the Bench.

There is no danger that the interval in Mr. CAMPBELL'S public relations to the country at large which the civil war produced will affect the judgment of our profession, and through them of the people of the whole country, in their esteem of the value of his great services and of those traits of character and lines of conduct that entitle him to be permanently remembered. The historian Gibbon has said that it was the great fortune of the Emperor Justinian that his greatest work had been in the administration of law and justice by the great code which he produced, and that his memory was committed to a permanent, imperishable body of men who profess and execute the law and maintain justice. In the same sense, the memory of the great judges, who have adorned and confirmed the dignity and power and purity of the administration of justice over a great people, shall be preserved, as the whole body of the profession of the law is the guardian and defender of their fame.

REMARKS OF MR. GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS.

BRETHREN OF THE BAR: When Judge CAMPBELL was appointed an Associate Justice of this Court, during the Administration of President Pierce, I was in practice here, and I soon made his acquaintance. His selection afforded a strong illustration of the wisdom of making the Supreme Court in some sort a representative body in reference to the different divisions of the Union. More than once, cases which would have been wrongfully decided if decided by the judgment of the other members of the Bench, were given a right direction by his knowledge of the local law and usages of the States composing his Circuit. His familiarity with both the civil and the common law and his extensive learning enabled him to be of very great service to the other members of the Court.

It is hardly possible for me on this occasion to avoid a reference to that exciting period when the judicial course of the different members of this Bench, in dealing with a subject of sectional controversy, attracted so much public attention. I am the only survivor of all those who took part in the argument and decision of the famous Dred Scott Case. I know, perhaps, more of the internal history of that case than any other person who is now living. I do not propose to detail that history now. But it is due to the Southern Judges who sat in that memorable case to speak of their positions and the doctrines which they maintained. The time has come when justice can be done to those who have passed away, and when history can perform its appropriate office.

At the December Term, in the year 1856, the case of Dred Scott, plaintiff in error, vs. John F. A. Sandford, stood for a second argument, on two questions stated by an order of the Court to be argued specifically at the Bar. The first question was whether Congress had constitutional authority to exclude slavery from a Territory of the United States, or, in other words, whether the Missouri Compromise Act, which excluded slavery from the whole of the Louisiana territory north of the parallel of 36° 30′, was a constitutionally valid law. The second question was whether a free negro of African descent, whose ancestors were imported into this country and sold as slaves, could be a citizen of the United States under the Judiciary Act, and as a citizen could sue in a Circuit Court of the United States. Having been invited by Mr. Montgomery Blair, counsel for the negro, Scott, to assist him in the argument, I chose the first of these questions, leaving to Mr. Blair the question of the citizenship of a free negro. Our opponents were Mr. Reverdy Johnson and Mr. Geyer, one of the Senators from Missouri. Ample time was allowed by the Court for the discussion of both questions.

The doctrine that slavery could go, proprio vigore, so to speak, into every Territory of the United States, against the express will of Congress, was not then entirely new, but it had never before been advanced in this Court. It was now advanced and maintained here with great ability and earnestness. The difficulty in the way of establishing it as a proposition of constitutional law was, that it was inconsistent with the interpretation that had always been given to the Territorial clause of the Constitution; for Congress had repeatedly, in organic Acts establishing Territories, both sanctioned and excluded slavery, and the power to exclude and prohibit was no greater exercise of authority than the power to recognize and confirm.

It was claimed, however, that the nature of this peculiar property, existing as an unquestionable right under the law of States having, with all the others, a common interest in the public domain, gave a citizen of one of those States a right to immigrate into a Territory of the United States with his slaves, and to hold them there as slaves, during the Territorial condition, notwithstanding the prohibition of an Act of Congress. It was a plausible claim. It seemed to be founded in an equality of right as between the different sections of the Union regarded as slave-holding and non-slave-holding States. It is not surprising, therefore—it never has been to me—that Judges of Southern birth and training, accustomed to this form of property, which lay at the basis of social life in those States, should have overlooked those considerations that rendered the claim untenable under the Constitution. Certainly they were bound to follow their convictions; and it seems to me that no impartial person can now examine their opinions, as pronounced from the Bench, without seeing that they expressed convictions most seriously and honestly entertained. Not only did those opinions express convictions honestly and sincerely held, but it was supposed by those learned and upright men that, when the Supreme Court should have affirmed the constitutional doctrine which they believed to be the true one, all further agitation and controversy would be ended. This was a great mistake and miscalculation, as the sequel proved.

Four years of great excitement and agitation followed, and in 1860–'61 came the attempted disruption of the Union and the sectional civil war. I do not now wish to speak of the doctrine of secession, its reasonableness or its unreasonableness, its soundness or its unsoundness. History, even if written from the Northern point of view, even if it shall maintain the futility of secession as a constitutional right, as I think it will, must recognize the fact that the Southern people sought to establish for themselves an independent government, in the conviction that their happiness and welfare required it. We of the North were just as firmly convinced that neither their happiness and welfare nor ours could be promoted by a division of the Union, or that such a division could be allowed. The matter had been debated in every form of discussion in which the human mind could engage, and at last it had to be referred to the dread arbitrament of war. This is an appropriate occasion, therefore, to speak of the quality of that patriotism which led pure and honorable men like Judge CAMPBELL, and hosts of others in civil and military life, to devote their energies and to stake their lives, after the great issue was made up, in an effort to establish a country for themselves and their posterity. Patriotism then became to such men a duty to the land of their birth and their affections. In the moral estimate which history should form of their conduct, it should be remembered that events, sweeping on with irresistible force, had compelled such men to make a choice between adhesion to the Federal Government and adhesion to the separate and independent government which the Southern people wished to make. Nor should it detract a single iota from the purity of their motives that the government and country which they aimed to establish was one that would recognize and perpetuate the bondage of the African race. Situated as they were, this was unavoidable, for no human wisdom could then foresee how the slavery of that race was to be gotten rid of, nor was it gotten rid of at last save as a result of a civil war. We can now look back upon all this without prejudice, and can see how an overruling Providence brought to an end an institution and a form of property which could have been ended in no other way.

We can rejoice that from the turmoil and hazards of that trying period, thanks be to God, the Constitution of the United States has come out of all its perils in a far better condition than could have been anticipated for it. It is no longer a subject of sectional altercation. We can enjoy its blessings and hand them down to posterity, grateful to the Supreme Governor of the Universe, grateful to all those who defended it and to those who accepted its requirements, yielded to its demands, and now claim an equal right in its benefits.

At the close of the civil war Judge CAMPBELL resumed the practice of his profession, and he has been a very conspicuous figure at this Bar for many years. He ranks with the greatest advocates of our time, not for eloquence, not for brilliancy, not for the arts of the rhetorician, but for those solid accomplishments, for that lucid and weighty argumentation, by which a court is instructed and aided to a right conclusion. The day of mere eloquence has passed away from the forum. What is effectual here now is clearness of statement, closeness and accuracy of reasoning, and the power to make learning useful in the attainment of judicial truth. These accomplishments were possessed by Judge CAMPBELL in a very uncommon degree. He has lived to a great age, and in the whole of his long life there has never been a public act or utterance that is to be regretted.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and,

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, the meeting adjourned.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

FRIDAY, April 12, 1889.

Present: The Hon. MELVILLE W. FULLER, Chief Justice,
SAMUEL F. MILLER,
STEPHEN J. FIELD,
JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
JOHN M. HARLAN,
HORACE GRAY,
SAMUEL BLATCHFORD,
LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR,
Associate Justices.

Mr. Attorney-General MILLER addressed the Court as follows:

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT: On the 18th of March last JOHN ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, a very distinguished lawyer and ex-Justice of this Court, departed this life.

For fifty years, a full half of the life-time of the Government, this eminent man has been intimately and conspicuously associated with the interpretation of the laws of the land and the administration of justice.

Nor is the length of Judge CAMPBELL'S professional career its only striking feature. The manner of his coming to the Bar was unusual.

In the first year of the first term of President Jackson, by a special Act of the Legislature of Georgia, his native State, Mr. CAMPBELL, with Robert Toombs and three or four others, was "admitted to practice law and equity" in that State.

Removing to the City of Montgomery, he at once took the same rank at the bar which he had maintained in school and college, among the foremost, and at the age of thirty he had no superior at the Bar of Alabama.

At forty-two he was appointed, and was worthy to be appointed, Associate Justice of this Court.

Not one of the learned and eminent jurists who sat with him here on the Bench or in the consultation-room now remains to bear witness to his virtues or his talents; but the opinions he wrote, found in Howard's Reports, volumes 15 to 21 inclusive, testify, and will testify so long as American Jurisprudence shall last, of his industry, his great abilities, and profound learning.

A disciple, an admirer, and a friend of Mr. Calhoun, in 1861 Judge CAMPBELL followed, though it is believed reluctantly followed, the teachings of the apostle of State sovereignty to their logical results.

Since the war he has easily maintained a place at the Bar, and, as a scholar and publicist, among the most eminent of the land.

Having no personal acquaintance with Judge CAMPBELL, it is not fitting that I should speak of his private life and personal character.

Fully appreciating his great and good qualities, both of head and heart, the members of this Bar, on the 6th instant, adopted resolutions expressive of our sentiments on the melancholy occasion of his death.

These resolutions are as follows:

The Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States have assembled for the purpose of giving expression to their sense of the loss which they, in common with the whole country, have sustained in the death of JOHN ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

It is but just to his memory to say that he was a jurist of extensive and varied learning in the common law, and civil law as well, and accustomed to resort to the great sources of jurisprudence, which are the school, we are told, where proficiency can best be acquired in the difficult art of applying the abstract principles of the law to actual cases.

His learning in constitutional law and in international law, and his large acquaintance with the political history of the country, added to his vast reading in general history and literature, fitted him admirably to sit in the Supreme Court of the United States, where for nearly eight years he was an honored and influential associate: Therefore be it resolved—

1. That the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States do hereby attest their admiration and appreciation of the great career of JOHN ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL as a leading practicing lawyer and as a Judge of the first rank, and do hereby commemorate his many public and private virtues, and that modesty and simplicity which were the chaste setting of his great intellect and learning.

2. That we tender the family of the deceased our sympathy; and that the Chairman be, and he is hereby, requested to send them a copy of these proceedings.

3. That the Chairman be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of these proceedings to the Attorney-General of the United States, with the request to present the same to the Supreme Court of the United States for such action as may be deemed proper.

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT: I move that these resolutions be incorporated in your record as permanent evidence of the high estimation in which Judge CAMPBELL was held by his brethren of the Bar.

The CHIEF JUSTICE responded as follows:

The Court recognizes in the decease of Mr. Justice CAMPBELL the departure of an eminent citizen, who through his power of intellect, profound learning, and unremitting diligence, coupled with integrity of mind and sincere love of justice, deservedly achieved high reputation as a jurist and reflected corresponding credit upon this Bench during the years he adorned it.

His accession here had been preceded, as his regretted retirement was followed, by distinguished service in the legal profession.

It is proper that marks of respect should be shown to his memory, now that, in the fullness of years, he has peacefully fallen asleep—

> Men must endure
> Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
> Ripeness is all.

The remarks of the Attorney-General and the resolutions will be spread upon the record.

GENERAL INDEX

TO THE

FOUR VOLUMES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK,

OCTOBER TERM, 1888.

ACCOUNTING. See DAMAGES, 16.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. See DEED, 6, 7.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also ADMIRALTY, 2; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 9; SHIPPING, 5.

1. Under the statutes of Arizona, both legal and equitable relief may be granted in the same action, and may be administered through the intervention of a jury or by the court itself, according to the nature of the remedy sought. Ely v. New Mexico & A. R. Co. 688

2. In an equity suit where the case against one of the defendants is so entire as to be incapable of being prosecuted in several suits, and another defendant is a necessary party to some portion of the case stated, the objection of multifariousness cannot prevail. Brown v. Guarantee Trust & Safe Deposit Co. 468

3. It is not indispensable that all the parties to a suit in equity should have an interest in all the matters contained in the suit; it will be sufficient if each party has an interest in some material matters in the suit, and they are connected with the others. Id.

4. To support the objection of multifariousness because the bill contains different causes of suit against the same person, two things must concur: (1) the grounds of suit must be different; (2) each ground must be sufficient as stated to sustain a bill. Id.

5. A bill is not multifarious which assails two patents issued to the same party, and which relate to the same subject, and both of which are held by the same defendant, the latter patent being for an improvement upon the invention of the earlier one. United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 450

6. The nature of a cause of action is not changed by recovering a judgment upon it. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 289

7. A partner who has sold his interest to another partner is not a necessary party to an action for an accounting of the affairs of the partnership. Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 1005

8. Under Cal. Civ. Code, § 372, relating to the appearance of infants in an action, probate proceedings are not civil actions. Robinson v. Fair, 415

ADMIRALTY. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 103–105; COURTS, 1.

1. A statute of a State cannot neutralize or affect the admiralty or maritime jurisdiction, or the operation of the maritime law in maritime cases. Butler v. Boston & S. Steamship Co. 1017

2. Death on the high seas or waters navigable from the sea, caused by negligence, does not create a cause of action in admiralty unless given by an Act of Congress or a state statute. Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 923

ADVERSE POSSESSION. See also BOUNDARIES.

Under the statute of New Mexico on the subject of limitations, adverse possession by defendant under claim of title of the lands sued for, for ten years prior to the commencement of an action of ejectment therefor, is a good defense in such action. Probst v. Board of Domestic Missions, etc. 642

AFFIDAVIT. See OATH.

ALABAMA CLAIMS.

The payment of the expenses of the Geneva Arbitration has not been charged by Congress upon the fund received under the award made there. United States v. Weld, 62

ALIENS.

1. The power of exclusion of foreigners is an incident of sovereignty, and the right to its exercise cannot be granted away or restrained on behalf of anyone. Chae Chan Ping v. United States, 1068

2. The government of the United States, through the action of the legislative department, can exclude aliens from its territory, although no actual hostilities exist with the nation of which the aliens are subjects. Id.

3. Although the Chinese Exclusion Act of October 1, 1888, is in contravention of express stipulations of the treaty of 1868 and of the supplemental treaty of 1880, it is not on that account invalid or to be restricted in its enforcement. Id.

4. The Act of Congress of October 1, 1888, prohibiting Chinese laborers from entering the United States who had departed before its passage, having a certificate issued under the Act of 1882 as amended by the Act of 1884 granting them permission to return, is valid. Chae Chan Ping v. United States, 1068

ANIMALS. See also COMMERCE, 8; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 23.

1. The brood of all tame and domestic animals belongs to the owner of the dam or mother. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Mann, 854

2. The validity of Iowa Code, § 4059, respecting the liability of owners of Texas cattle for allowing them to run at large, is to be determined without any reference to the validity of § 4058, which is directed against the importation of such cattle. Kimmish v. Ball, 695

APPEAL AND ERROR.

I. JURISDICTION.

II. PROCEEDINGS TO TRANSFER CAUSE; RECORD.

III. PRELIMINARY MOTIONS, ETC.; DISMISSAL.

IV. HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

V. JUDGMENT.

See also CASES CERTIFIED, 1–5.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. A judgment of a lower appellate court which reverses the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction, and remands the case to it for further proceedings, is not a final judgment. Smith v. Adams, 895

2. A judgment in a short and summary proceeding analogous to the statutory remedy given in many of the States to try the right of property, at the instance of the party whose property is alleged to be wrongfully seized, is a judgment at law and reviewable upon writ of error. New Orleans v. Louisiana Construction Co. 607

3. An order upon demurrer to a bill in equity, setting forth the circumstances under which the bill is to be dismissed or the relief granted, which circumstances and the sum therein required to be paid are matters yet to be determined, is not final or appealable. Barker v. Craig, 147

4. An order authorizing a receiver of a railway company to borrow a sum of money on his certificates, and directing that the same shall be a first lien on the property, made after a decree of foreclosure and sale of the property, is of such final nature that an appeal can be taken from it to the United States Supreme Court. Re Farmers Loan & Trust Co. 656

5. The necessity of an order to issue receiver's certificates for the preservation of a railway from destruction during the pendency of the appeal on the main case does not prevent the right of appeal from the order. Id.

6. An order or decree made after a decree which disposes of the principal subject of litigation, which passes upon the material rights of the parties and partakes of the nature of a final decision of those rights, may be appealed from. Id.

7. When the Circuit Court of the United States has entered its judgment of imprisonment and fine upon the trial of an indictment, and has overruled the motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial, the judgment thus entered is final. United States v. Pile, 904

8. To authorize the review of a state judgment by the United States Supreme Court, it must appear that the decision of a federal question was necessary to the determination of the case, and was actually decided. De Saussure v. Gaillard, 125

9. Unless it appears affirmatively that the decision of a federal question was necessary to the determination of a cause, and that it was actually decided, or that the judgment as rendered could not have been given without deciding it, the Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction of a writ of error to a state court. Marrow v. Brinkley, 654

10. In order to review a state judgment it is essential that the record should disclose, not only that the alleged right, privilege, or immunity was specially set up and claimed in the court below, but that the decision of the court was against the right so set up or claimed. Clark v. Pennsylvania, 487

11. Alleged errors of a state court, which involve questions either of fact or of state, and not of federal law, are not reviewable in the United States Supreme Court on writ of error. Quimby v. Boyd, 502

12. The right and time of suit under a state statute are questions for the determination of the state courts, whose judgment is not reviewable by the United States Supreme Court, unless the statute affects a right claimed under the United States Constitution or laws. De Saussure v. Gaillard, 125

13. Where a state court based its judgment on a ground other than a law raising a federal question, the United States Supreme Court will not take jurisdiction, although the position of the state court is an unsound one. Id.

14. Jurisdiction of a case from a state court cannot be retained by the Supreme Court of the United States on a suggestion made for the first time in the latter court, that if the state court, proceeding upon the principles of general law only, has erred, the plaintiffs in error have been deprived of their rights without due process of law. Marrow v. Brinkley, 654

15. Where the evidence upon which the plaintiff in error was convicted is not made a part of the record, nor what it tended to establish anywhere therein stated, and certain instructions to the jury were requested and refused, it cannot be determined whether the action of the court involved the point alleged as error, in denying him the right, under federal law, to sell liquors on a steamboat, or whether the refusal to give the instruction amounted to a ruling and denial of such claim. Clark v. Pennsylvania, 487

16. The Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction to review the decision of a state court in an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent against creditors, merely because the suit was brought by an assignee in bankruptcy. McKenna v. Simpson, 771

17. The decision of the state court as to what should be deemed a fraudulent conveyance does not present any federal question, nor does the application by the court of the evidence in reaching that decision raise one. Id.

18. The question whether the evidence in the case was sufficient to justify the verdict of a jury, and the question whether the Constitution of the State was complied with, or not, in the proceedings on the trial, are not federal questions which the Supreme Court of the United States can review. Baldwin v. Kansas, 640

19. When a judgment has been rendered on contract in a state court, and remedies for its collection existing at the time of the making of the contract are taken away by State Constitution or statute, and the deprivation enforced by the final judgment of the state courts, a writ of error, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, may be taken to the United States Supreme Court. Shreveport v. Cole, 589

20. The Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction to review a judgment of the supreme court of a State in an action to recover lands, where the matter in dispute arises either under the French Treaty of 1803, the Acts of Congress in regard to the lands, or the authority of some officer of the government of the United States exercised over them. Glasgow v. Baker, 513

21. The Supreme Court of the United States can review a judgment of a state court, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, only when the right, privilege, or immunity claimed under the Constitution or any treaty or statute of the United States was specially set up or claimed in the state court at the proper time and in the proper way. Chappell v. Bradshaw, 369

22. Where the right of a ship owner to limited liability was first claimed on a petition for a rehearing on appeal in a state court, when the court refused to consider it because made too late, it presents no question for the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error. Id.

23. Where, at the trial before a jury, no objection was made to the form of the oath, or on making the motion for a new trial, or on the motion for arrest of judgment; and such objection was first suggested in the state supreme court, and that court refused to consider the objection on the ground that it was not taken at the trial,—the Supreme Court of the United States cannot consider it, because the right was not set up or claimed in the proper court below. Baldwin v. Kansas, 640

24. Where, in a writ of error to a judgment of the supreme court of the State rendered on a verdict for the recovery of a mining claim, it does not appear that in the state court the fact that the claim of plaintiffs followed in its length the general course of the vein, or that the side lines were parallel with, and the end lines at right angles to, the vein, was drawn in question, it is too late to do so in the Supreme Court of the United States, as the basis of jurisdiction. Quimby v. Boyd, 502

25. Where plaintiff in error was indicted and convicted and sentenced in the Court of Quarter Sessions of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, and applied to a judge of the supreme court of that State for a writ of error to the court of quarter sessions, which was denied, and he could go no further, the judgment of the latter court may be considered final for the purposes of a writ of error from the United States Supreme Court. Clark v. Pennsylvania, 487

26. A claim of over $5,000 disallowed to the appellant by the circuit court, which is brought up by the appeal, is sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of the United States. Richardson v. Green, 872

27. The Supreme Court of the United States, in its appellate jurisdiction over federal courts, cannot take cognizance of a case in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, does not exceed the sum or value of $5,000, except where the nature of the right involved gives jurisdiction without regard to the value in dispute. Cogswell v. Fordyce, 484

28. In cases brought to the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error for the re-examination of judgments in affirmance in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the appellate court, the value of the matter in dispute is determined by the judgment affirmed, without adding interest or costs. District of Columbia v. Gannon, 922

29. Where interest is part of the claim litigated, and the judgment provides for interest to run from a period antecedent to the rendition of the judgment, or, in actions ex contractu, according to the terms of the contract upon which the action is based, the interest may be added for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court. Id.

30. In an action for personal injuries, if, by the judgment of affirmance in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, interest is directed to be added to the judgment at special term, the interest will be part of the jurisdictional amount; but where, in such action, the judgment is affirmed in general term, with costs, but not with interest, interest will not be added to the judgment for the purpose of giving the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction. Id.

31. Where the instructions refused by the trial court involved the Acts of Congress creating the government of the District of Columbia, only as bearing on the question of the liability of the District for negligence in failing to keep the streets in repair and by way of construction, and the validity of the Acts themselves, or of the authority exercised under them, was not denied, the jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court cannot be maintained on the ground that the validity of the authority, conferred by Congress upon the District Commissioners is drawn in question. Id.

32. Where the suit is a libel in rem, and the stipulation given to release the vessel is for the sum of $25,000 for the benefit of five parties, each of whose claim for damages is $10,000, some of whom might recover more than $5,000, the amount involved in each case, on the question of jurisdiction, is $10,000, which is sufficient to give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction as to amount. Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 928

33. Where a verdict was rendered in a Circuit Court of the United States for $5,500, and the court directed, as minuted by the clerk, judgment to be entered thereon, and the next day, in the absence of defendant and his counsel, the court granted leave to the plaintiff to remit the sum of $500, and judgment was rendered for $5,000 and costs; and such court denied a motion to set aside the allowance of the remittitur and to correct the judgment,—the action of the circuit court was not an abuse of its discretion; and as the judgment, as it stands, is for $5,000 only, the motion to dismiss must be granted. Pacific Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. O'Connor, 488

34. Where the petition for a writ of certiorari alleges, upon the oath of the petitioner, that he is in the possession of the premises under a lease having nearly a year to run, with a privilege of extension for four years more, and that he has expended $15,000 in permanent improvements upon the leased property, of which he will be deprived if the judgment of the inferior court—which he alleges to be void for want of jurisdiction—is not set aside by writ of certiorari, the reasonable inference from this is that the possession of the premises, with the right to use these improvements, throughout the lease and the extension thereof, is worth more than $5,000, showing that the matter in dispute is of sufficient pecuniary value to support the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, under the Act of March 3, 1885, chap. 355 (28 Stat. at L. 443). Harris v. Barber, 697

35. An action for the breach of a contract to make and sell a patented article, in which the validity and infringement of the patent are controverted, is a "case touching patent rights," of which the United States Supreme Court has jurisdiction, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 699, subd. 1, without regard to the amount in dispute. St. Paul Plow Works v. Starling, 251

36. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 699, subd. 3, gives the United States Supreme Court jurisdiction, without regard to amount, only of suits, whether sounding in tort or in contract, brought by individuals or corporations against officers of revenue acting on behalf of the United States, and does not include any suit brought by the United States against one of those officers. United States v. Haynes, 1060

37. A suit on an official bond does not come within the exception of that section, relating to actions for the enforcement of the revenue laws. Id.

38. An action against the sureties on a bail bond given to appear in the United States court to answer to an indictment for forging checks against an assistant treasurer of the United States is not one for the enforcement of a revenue law, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 699, subd. 2, and can be taken to the supreme court only when the bond exceeds $5,000. United States v. Broadhead, 147

39. An action upon a bond given to supersede a judgment or decree of a court of the United States is not an action brought on account of the deprivation of any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States, or of any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States, so as to give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 699, without regard to the sum or value in dispute. Cogswell v. Fordyce, 484

40. A writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States cannot be maintained, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 699, subd. 4, where the judgment was not rendered in "a case brought on account of the deprivation of any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States, or of any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States." Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Kinneard, 653

41. The action of the Circuit Court of the United States in refusing plaintiffs in error a separate trial is not open to review upon a writ of error, where it appears that the value of the matter in dispute is not sufficient to give the supreme court jurisdiction. Id.

42. Under the Act of Congress regulating appeals from the District of Columbia and the Territories, it is sufficient if the validity of a statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States, is drawn in question, in order to justify a review of the decision by the United States Supreme Court, irrespective of the conclusion reached. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 908

43. "The validity of a statute," as these words are used in the Act of Congress, refers to the power of Congress to pass the particular statute, and not to mere judicial construction, as contradistinguished from a denial of the legislative power. Id.

44. Whenever the power to enact a statute as it is by its terms, or is made to read by construction, is fairly open to denial and denied, the validity of such statute is drawn in question, but not otherwise. Id.

45. In an action in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, for injuries resulting from a nuisance maintained by a railroad company in a public street in front of plaintiff's house, by an unlawful use of the street for its tracks, and from noises, cinders, etc., where the railroad company claims the right to use the street under certain statutes of the United States, and the trial court did not deny the right of the company to use the street, but limited its right to the use held by it to be authorized by such statute,—the validity of no Act of Congress or authority under the United States was drawn in question so as to give the Supreme Court of the United States jurisdiction. Id.

46. The Act of Congress of Feb. 16, 1865, § 3, fixing the jurisdictional amount on writs of error to the United States Supreme Court at $5,000, applies to the United States, except in cases enumerated in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 699. United States v. Broadhead, 147

47. The Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction to review the decision of the Supreme Court of Montana in a criminal case. Farnsworth v. Montana, 616

48. A proceeding by information in the probate court in Montana against a person for the crime of misdemeanor in having, as a commercial traveler, in violation of a statute, offered for sale in that Territory merchandise to be delivered at a future time, without first having obtained a license, is a criminal case, and therefore cannot be taken by a writ of error to the United States Supreme Court. Id.

49. No test of money value can be applied to the deprivation of liberty, whether as a punishment for crime or otherwise, in order to confer jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court of the United States. Id.

50. It is impossible to state any rule by which the benefit the county may gain, or the damage it may suffer, from the result of a contested election as to a county seat can be estimated; therefore there is not in the case such an amount in dispute as to enable the Supreme Court of the United States to take jurisdiction of the appeal. Smith v. Adams, 895

51. The acceptance, by appellants, of what was confessedly theirs,—as the receiving of the remaining bonds and money after the liens decreed thereon were satisfied,—is not an admission that the decree they seek to reverse adjudging liens on the bonds was not erroneous, nor does it take away the jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court to review the decree. Reynes v. Dumont, 934

II. PROCEEDINGS TO TRANSFER CAUSE; RECORD.

52. The practice and rules of state courts do not apply to proceedings in the Circuit Court of the United States, taken for the purpose of reviewing in the Supreme Court of the United States a judgment of the circuit court. Re Chateaugay Ore & Iron Co.'s Petition, 508

53. The preparation, perfecting, settling, and signing of a bill of exceptions are not required, by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 914, to conform to the practice in the courts of record of the State within which the circuit court is held. Id.

54. The manner or the time for the removal of a case by a writ of error from one federal court to another is to be regulated exclusively by Acts of Congress, or, when they are silent, by the common law or by the rules and practice of the courts of the United States. Id.

55. The rules of the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York clearly contemplate proceedings to perfect a bill of exceptions within the time limited by those rules, without reference to the expiration of a term. Id.

56. Appeals from the Circuit Courts of the United States are subject to the same rules, regulations, and restrictions as are or may be prescribed in cases of writs of error. Danville v. Brown, 507

57. The citation, where security is taken out of court after the term, is not jurisdictional. If by accident it has been omitted, a motion to dismiss the appeal will not be granted until an opportunity to give the requisite notice has been furnished. Richardson v. Green, 872

58. The issuing of a citation may be waived by the appellees; and a general appearance by them is a waiver. Id.

59. The Supreme Court of the United States will not entertain an appeal where the transcript of the record is not filed in that court at the term next succeeding the taking of the appeal, unless a recognized satisfactory excuse for the laches is made. Id.; Hill v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 651; Norton v. Brownsville Taxing Dist. 784

60. Where the record was duly received and filed by the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, but the appeals had not been docketed because the rules as to a deposit for costs and as to entry of appearance had not, through inadvertence, been complied with, and afterwards, on a compliance with such rules, the case was docketed and appearance entered,—a subsequent motion to dismiss for not docketing the case in time will not be granted. Richardson v. Green, 872

61. The actual time of presenting and filing an appeal cannot be anticipated by entering an order nunc pro tunc. When the time for taking an appeal has expired, it cannot be arrested or called back by a simple order of the court. Credit Co. v. Arkansas C. R. Co. 448

62. The same rule is applicable to appeals as to writs of error in regard to the time within which an appeal may be brought, and in regard to its filing. Id.

63. Where an appeal was allowed by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States on the last day on which an appeal could be taken, but was not presented to the court below or filed with the clerk until five days after said time had expired, such appeal is ineffectual. Id.

64. Where an appeal is prayed for and allowed, but never prosecuted, no bond being given, no citation issued, and no return of the record being made to the Supreme Court of the United States at the ensuing term, the appeal ceases to have any operation or effect. Id.

65. A writ of error not sued out or served within sixty days after the judgment which is the subject of the writ does not operate as a supersedeas. Western Air Line Construction Co. v. McGillis, 324

66. Where the writ of error does not operate as a supersedeas, a motion to vacate supersedeas is not necessary or proper. Id.

67. The time for giving security upon a writ of error, provided by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1007, is sixty days, exclusive of Sundays. The words "Sundays exclusive," in the first clause of the section, are also applicable to the second clause. Danville v. Brown, 507

68. It does not affect the validity of an appeal bond or the integrity of an appeal, that the bond runs to a party against whom a decree for the recovery of money was rendered, and also runs to other parties defendant as obligees, as to whom the suit was dismissed and against whom appellant may seek to obtain a decree on the hearing of the appeal. Hill v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 651

69. In an action against a husband and wife, where the wife alone was made party to a writ of error by the plaintiff, a citation served on the husband is sufficient to bring him up on the writ to aid his wife. Marchand v. Livaudais, 324

70. An appeal will not be dismissed on the ground that in the order allowing it the appellees are not named, where it is stated therein that the other parties to the decree are appel-

lees, if the bond on the appeal gives the names of the appellees in full. Richardson v. Green, 872

71. The Supreme Court of the United States cannot take jurisdiction of a writ of error which describes the parties by the name of a firm, or which designates some of the parties by the expression "& Co.," or the expression "and others," or in any other way than by their individual names. Estes v. Trabue, 437

72. Where the record discloses the names of the individuals who compose a firm, the writ of error can be amended in the Supreme Court of the United States, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1005 (Act June 1, 1872, § 8; 17 Stat. at L. 196, chap. 255), provided the defect has not prejudiced, and the amendment will not injure, the defendant in error. Id.

73. Where a judgment is distinctly one against the claimants and their sureties in a bond jointly, for a definite sum of money, and there is nothing distributive in the judgment, all the parties against whom the judgment is entered must join in a writ of error, or else there must be a proper summons and severance, in order to allow of the prosecution of the writ by any less than the whole number of the defendants against whom the judgment is entered. Id.

74. Where a decree is severable in fact and in law, two of the defendants may be allowed to prosecute an appeal therefrom, without joining a codefendant who did not desire to appeal. City Nat. Bank v. Hunter, 752

75. No case will be heard in the United States Supreme Court until a complete record is filed. The complaint and answers are necessary to such hearing, and unless the record contains them the case cannot be heard. Redfield v. Parks, 1053

76. The Supreme Court of the United States will act only upon the record of the court below; and the petition for a writ of error forms no part of the record. Clark v. Pennsylvania, 487

77. To obtain a reversal of a judgment it is necessary that the facts upon which such reversal is claimed should appear from the record, sufficiently to be passed upon. New York & C. Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 1081

78. Affidavits filed in support of a motion for a new trial are no part of the record on error, unless made so by bill of exceptions. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co. 439

79. Where the defendant prepared and served a bill of exceptions within the forty days allowed by the order of the court, and it was retained by the plaintiff for ten days after its service, and he then obtained by stipulation from the defendant ten days more time to prepare and serve amendments thereto, and the notice of settlement was accepted, and written admission of its service was given, and it was retained by him,—the plaintiff was estopped from raising the objection that the time to make and serve the bill of exceptions had expired. Re Chateaugay Ore & Iron Co.'s Petition, 508

80. Where the bill of exceptions stated that the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for defendant, and that the jury returned such verdict, and that the plaintiff excepted to said instructions and verdict during the term at which the case was tried and while said term was still in session, and there was no opportunity for plaintiff's counsel to except until the instructions were given,—Held, that the general instruction of the court to find for defendant was excepted to at the proper time. Dunlap v. Northeastern R. Co. 1058

81. The United States Supreme Court cannot amend the record so as to give jurisdiction to the circuit court. Cameron v. Hodges, 132

82. Where a judgment of the United States Circuit Court is reversed by the supreme court for lack of jurisdiction in the circuit court, it is for the latter court to determine, when the cause is remanded, whether the pleadings can be so amended as to give jurisdiction. Metcalf v. Watertown, 543

83. Where jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States depends upon citizenship of the parties, such citizenship, or the facts which, in legal intendment, constitute it, should be distinctly and positively averred in the pleading, or should appear in the record. Chapman v. Barney, 800

84. Where, on appeal to the United States Supreme Court, the transcript does not contain all the necessary papers, and more than three years have elapsed since it was filed, and defendants in error have not moved to dismiss the case for a failure to comply with the rules, and the case has been submitted on both sides on the merits,—a writ of certiorari may issue on the application of the plaintiff in error to bring up the papers omitted from the transcript. Redfield v. Parks, 1053

III. PRELIMINARY MOTIONS, ETC.; DISMISSAL.

85. Where there is a substantial defect in a writ of error, which the Supreme Court of the United States cannot amend, it has no jurisdiction to try the case. It will then of its own motion dismiss the case without awaiting the action of a party. Estes v. Trabue, 437

86. Whatever may be the proper relief, a writ of error will not be dismissed because the citation was served and made returnable less than thirty days after it was granted. Segrist v. Crabtree, 323

87. On a motion to dismiss an appeal from a decree, it is not proper to decide whether a prior decree in the same case was a final decree, or what orders and decrees made by the circuit court prior to the making of the decree appealed from can be reviewed on the appeal from it. These questions can only be considered when that appeal shall come up for hearing on its merits. Hill v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 651

88. It is not proper, on the motion to dismiss an appeal, to decide what questions may be involved on the hearing of that appeal. Id.

89. There must be color for the motion to dismiss, to warrant the Supreme Court of the United States in entertaining a motion to affirm. Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 923

90. On motions to dismiss and affirm, the Supreme Court of the United States requires the printing of only so much of the record as will enable it to act understandingly without referring to the transcript. Walston v. Nevin, 544

91. Where the question raised in a case in the United States Supreme Court is a federal question, the court will not sustain a motion to dismiss; but if there was color for the motion, and the contention made has been often determined adversely, so that the rule must be regarded as settled, a motion to affirm will be granted. Id.

92. The objection that an intervention, called a "third opposition" by the Code of Louisiana, cannot be availed of by defendant in execution in regard to property involved in the case, cannot be properly disposed of in the Supreme Court of the United States on motion to dismiss or affirm. New Orleans v. Louisiana Construction Co. 607

93. A motion to reinstate a case dismissed sua sponte because there was no evidence of the jurisdictional amount, where the affidavits are unsatisfactory as to value and the opposite party had no opportunity to produce counter affidavits, may be continued until the next term, with leave to either party to file additional affidavits. Hunt v. Blackburn, 323

IV. HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

94. Whether a Circuit Court of the United States has or has not jurisdiction of the case is a question which the supreme court must examine and determine, even if the parties forbear to make it, or consent that the case be considered on its merits. Morris v. Gilmer, 690; Cameron v. Hodges, 132; Hegler v. Faulkner, 210; Metcalf v. Watertown, 543; Chapman v. Barney, 800

95. On an appeal to the United States Supreme Court in an equity suit, the whole case is before the court, and it is bound to decide the case so far as it is in a condition to be decided. Ridings v. Johnson, 401

96. An appeal of a cause brings up the whole cause as far as it had progressed, including an appealable order previously made by the court. Central Trust Co. v. Seasongood, 985

97. On an appeal from a judgment discharging a habeas corpus issued on the petition of a person arrested for a crime committed in a foreign country, and held for extradition, the supreme court will consider only the jurisdiction of, and the sufficiency of the legal ground for the action of, the commissioner, and will not consider questions as to the admission of evidence before him. Benson v. McMahon, 284

98. The conclusions of a master in matters of fact have every reasonable presumption in their favor, and are not to be set aside or modified, unless there clearly appears to have been error or mistake on his part. Callaghan v. Myers, 547

99. When the trial is, by rule of court and consent of parties, before a referee or arbitrator, no question of law can be reviewed on error, except whether the facts found by him support the judgment below. Andes v. Slauson, 989

100. Where the pleadings present issues of fact triable by a jury only, and there is no waiver of a jury trial, but the case is tried, by consent of the parties, before the judge at chambers, such trial is neither a trial by jury nor a trial by the court, but a trial by the judge as a referee; and the bill of exceptions allowed at such trial is irregular, and the facts and rulings stated therein cannot be regarded or reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States; and where the questions argued by the plaintiff in error do not appear of record independently of the bill of exceptions, that court has no authority to pass upon them. Id.

101. Questions of law arising from the trial of an issue of fact cannot be made part of the record by bill of exceptions, unless the trial is by jury, or by the court after due waiver in writing of a jury trial. Id.

102. The right of review by the Supreme Court of the United States of the judgments of the circuit courts, by bill of exceptions and writ of error, is limited to questions of law appearing on the face of the record, and does not extend to matters of fact or discretion. Id.

103. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States to review the decree of the circuit court in admiralty is limited to questions of law, and does not extend to questions of fact. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 788

104. The Supreme Court of the United States in an admiralty appeal has no authority to pass upon the comparative weight of conflicting evidence. The Gazelle, 496

105. A review of the decrees of the circuit court in admiralty causes is limited to a determination by the United States Supreme Court of the questions of law arising upon the record, and to such rulings of the circuit court, excepted to at the time, as may be presented by a bill of exceptions. Id.

106. A positive finding by the circuit court that anchorage was unsafe is not controlled by other statements therein (which are rather recitals of the evidence than findings of fact) that large steamers and other vessels had discharged their cargoes at that anchorage without disaster. Id.

107. The appellate court is not authorized to assume, from the mere fact that a large sum was remitted, that the court below believed that the jury were governed by prejudice or willfully disregarded the evidence. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Mann, 854

108. The record on the trial of an indictment for murder, stating that the jurors were sworn "to well and truly try the issues joined," is not to be regarded as a statement of the oath actually administered; and where the journal entry states that the jurors were "duly" sworn, such statement is consistent with the fact that the oath required by a statute was, in form, duly administered. Baldwin v. Kansas, 640

109. Where the finding was in fact and in legal effect for only part of premises involved in ejectment, and the court is bound to assume from the record that that part is embraced in the description given in the complaint, the judgment for that part will be affirmed. Morgan v. Eggers, 56

110. Where there is no special finding of facts upon the question of title in ejectment, the supreme court will assume that the evidence authorized the finding as to the particular premises awarded to plaintiff, who cannot complain that judgment was not rendered for him for the part not shown to belong to him. Morgan v. Eggers, 56

111. A letter found in the record as part of the evidence and certified by the clerk to have been filed on the same day as the other exhibits, where the record does not show that any objection was taken to its admission at the hearing before the court, must, under Rule 13 of the Supreme Court of the United States, be deemed to have been admitted by consent. Shields v. Hanbury, 565

112. Authority vested in the judges of the circuit court, to be exercised according to their discretion, must be exercised and governed by the principles of a judicial discretion. Re Farmers Loan & Trust Co. 656

113. Amendments to pleadings are discretionary with the courts below, and not reviewable in the Supreme Court of the United States. Bullitt County v. Washer, 885; Chapman v. Barney, 800

114. The granting or refusing a new trial in a Circuit Court of the United States is not subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Mann, 854; Bullitt County v. Washer, 885

115. Where the parties interested in the allowance of an amount made by the master have not appealed from the decree, the allowance must stand. Goodwin v. Fox, 805

116. One appealing from a decree of the General Term of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is only entitled to relief in regard to that part of the decree which was appealed from the special to the general term. Porter v. White, 112

117. Where the subject matter of a suit belongs to the class over which a court of equity has jurisdiction, the objection that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law, not made until the hearing in the appellate tribunal, is too late. Reynes v. Dumont, 934

118. An exception that the master refused to suppress depositions will be overruled, where it nowhere appears by the record that any objection was made before the master to the testimony. Goodwin v. Fox, 805

119. Where no objection to the declaration was made at the trial or before, and no ruling on the subject was asked, and the defendant did not request at the trial that the plaintiff should elect on which count he would ask a verdict, the objection cannot be taken, in the appellate court, that the counts of the declaration were inconsistent with each other. National Security Bank v. Butler, 682

120. An objection to an instruction of the court, not taken in the court below, that the court assumed a fact which should have been left to the jury, is not entitled to weight. Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 979

121. An instruction given by the judge to a jury, in response to a question asked by them upon coming into court after they had retired to consider their verdict, if not excepted to, is no ground of error. It is no excuse for the want of an exception that neither of the counsel were present when the instruction was given. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co. 489

122. Where, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, defendant moved the court to direct a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff had not shown facts sufficient to entitle him to recover, and the motion was denied, and defendant excepted,—Held, that, as the defendant did not then rest his case, but proceeded to introduce evidence, the exception failed. Robertson v. Perkins, 686

123. Where there is enough in the bill to warrant the relief, and the defendants could not have been taken by surprise, the decree should not be reversed on the ground that the allegata and the probata do not sufficiently agree to justify it. Moore v. Crawford, 878

124. The setting aside of the decree first rendered, and the rendition of another different decree by the court below, is not ground for reversal, where the court had power to take the course it did, and the supreme court is satisfied with the result. Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 1005

125. Where the issue as to the injury to property was the real point of inquiry on the trial, the rulings of the court excluding proper evidence upon the issue will not be sustained for want of affirmative proof in the record of plaintiff's ownership of the property. Shepherd v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 970

126. Where the special pleas contained nothing of which the defendant could not have availed himself under his plea of the general issue, if the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to any of the special pleas, it was an error without injury, and no ground of reversal. Pollak v. Brush Electric Asso. 474

127. A ruling of the court respecting the inference deducible from the prior possession of a mining claim by the plaintiff is not erroneous or prejudicial to the defendant where the validity of the original location is not put in issue by the answer, which only sets up a forfeiture of the claim by the plaintiff and defendant's relocation of it. Hammer v. Garfield Min. & M. Co. 964

128. Where, taking together all the instructions of the court to the jury, they conform to the well-settled law, and there is no ground for supposing that the jury had been misled, the judgment will not be reversed by reason of the instructions. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co. 489

129. Although incompetent evidence be received in an equity case, yet if the decree can be sustained by such evidence in the record as is competent and relevant, the United States Surpeme Court will not disturb the decree. Ruckman v. Cory, 728

130. When no rule of law is incorrectly stated, and all matters of fact are ultimately submitted to the jury, an expression of opinion upon the facts by the judge in his charge is not reviewable on error. Rucker v. Wheeler, 102

V. JUDGMENT.

131. Where the circuit court awarded a lien, with a priority, for the full amount claimed, and the evidence sustained the lien for only a part of such amount, and the master's report did not state the amount for which a lien was proper, the case was remanded for further proofs. Hussell v. Wilcox, 1001

182. In a case removed from a state court, where the record does not show facts to authorize the removal, the judgment will be reversed by the United States Supreme Court on the ground that the circuit court had no jurisdiction, and the case remanded to that court, with directions to send it back to the state court. Stevens v. Nichols, 914

183. Where the circuit court dismissed a case on the merits, instead of for want of jurisdiction, as it should have done, the case will be remanded, with directions to dismiss the suit for want of jurisdiction. Blackloek v. Small, 70

184. Where the whole basis and foundation of a suit has disappeared by a decree rendered in another suit after the appeal taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, that court will remand the cause to the circuit court, with instructions to allow the appellant, defendant below, to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, or a bill to suspend or avoid the operation of the decree, upon the new matter arising from the reversal of the decree in the other case. Ballard v. Searls, 846

185. A decree of the circuit court dismissing a bill generally, in a suit in which it is without jurisdiction, will be modified so that the dismissal will be without prejudice to complainant's right to proceed at law. Smith v. Bourbon County, 73

ARMY AND NAVY. See also ASSUMPSIT, 1.

1. The time of the service of a cadet in the Military Academy at West Point is to be regarded as part of the time he served in the army, within the meaning of the Act of July 5, 1838, and should be counted in computing his longevity pay under that Act; and he is entitled to receive so much of the amount thereon thus computed as is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. United States v. Watson, 852

2. Under the Act of 1875, retired officers of the army situated as therein described are not held, if they accept or hold diplomatic or consular appointment, to have resigned their places in the army; but they are not entitled to pay as army officers when they are absent from their country in the discharge of continuous official duties inconsistent with military service. Such officers, when in the diplomatic or consular service, cannot receive double compensation. Badeau v. United States, 997

3. A cadet midshipman at the naval academy, appointed June 6, 1873, who graduated June 18, 1879, and was appointed ensign Nov. 15, 1881, is entitled to additional pay as ensign, under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. at L. 473), for the time of his services as cadet. United States v. Cook, 464

4. Under the Acts of Congress of Aug. 5, 1882, and March 3, 1883, a paymaster in the navy has not the right to the pay of the several grades he might have reached if his appointment in the regular navy is treated as having been made at the date of his entry into the volunteer navy. The Act of 1883 deals with credit for length of service and the additional pay which arises therefrom, and not with the matter of regular salary, and has no reference to benefits derived from promotion to different grades, but is confined to the lowest grade having graduated pay. Barton v. United States, 663

5. The Act of Congress of June 30, 1876, having repealed the Act of June 16, 1874, so far as it applied to the traveling expenses of officers of the navy, became operative upon the date of its approval, and thereafter such traveling expenses were regulated and defined by its provisions. United States v. McDonald, 506

6. Where a part of a journey of a boatswain in the navy was performed prior to the passage of the Act of June 30, 1876, and part of such journey was performed after the passage of such Act, for the latter part of such journey such officer is entitled to receive the milage provided by such Act. Id.

7. The Acts of Congress of 1882 and 1883 do not require or authorize a restatement of the pay accounts of an officer of the navy who served in the regular or volunteer army or navy, so as to give him credit, in the grade held by him prior to their passage, for the time he served in the army or navy before reaching that grade. Congress only intended to give him credit, in the grade held by him after those Acts took effect, for all prior services, whether as an enlisted man or officer, counting such services, however separated by distinct periods of time, as if they had been continuous and in the regular navy in the lowest grade having graduated pay held by him since last entering the service. United States v. Foster, 486

1. A contract by a mining company to deliver ore from time to time, to be paid for after a subsequent assay and ascertainment of the price, is not assignable. Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Min. Co. 246

2. Rights arising out of contract, coupled with liabilities or involving the relation of personal confidence, are not assignable. Id.

3. Assignment by operation of law, as in case of an executor, is quite different from assignment by act of the party. Id.

ASSUMPSIT.

1. Where an officer of the army was paid, as such, for time during the intervals of his employment in a diplomatic or consular capacity, being an officer de facto, if not de jure, the moneys so paid to him cannot be recovered back by the United States. Badeau v. United States, 997

2. A bank may recover back money paid on forged paper, although both parties were ignorant of the forgery and no express warranty was made of the genuineness of the paper. Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 342

ATTACHMENT. See BANKRUPTCY, 1–4.

ATTORNEYS.

A power of attorney to prosecute a claim for one half of the recovery, on which is indorsed a substitution of plaintiff as attorney, containing no assignment of any specific interest in the claim, and no provision creating any lien upon it or its proceeds, does not give plaintiff any equitable lien on the fund by distinct appropriation, or show any agreement for his payment out of it. Porter v. White, 112

BAILMENT. See BANKS, 1–4.

BANKRUPTCY. See also COURTS, 4.

1. A discharge in bankruptcy does not prevent an attaching creditor from taking judgment against the debtor in such limited form as may enable him to reap the benefit of his attachment. Hill v. Harding, 1083

2. Where a bond given by defendant in attachment is executed before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy, the discharge in bankruptcy protects him from liability to the obligees, so that, in an action on the bond against him and his sureties, any judgment recovered by the plaintiffs must be accompanied by a perpetual stay of execution against him; but his discharge does not prevent that judgment from being rendered generally against them. Id.

3. When the attachment has been dissolved by the defendant entering into a bond or recognizance, with sureties, conditioned to pay to the plaintiffs any judgment rendered against him on final trial, there is nothing in the Bankrupt Act to prevent the state court from rendering a judgment against the bankrupt, notwithstanding his discharge, for the purpose of enabling plaintiffs to proceed against the sureties in the bond given on the attachment. Id.

4. When an attachment against a bankrupt remains in force, the creditor, notwithstanding his discharge, may have judgment against him, to be levied only upon the property attached. Id.

5. Where a produce dealer, as an accommodation, collected money for parties at their request, and, without fraudulent intent, deposited the proceeds to his own credit with his own funds, and before he paid it over was, by an unexpected revulsion, forced into bankruptcy, the debt is not one created by fraud or by defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity, within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5117, so as to exempt it from his discharge under the bankrupt law. Noble v. Hammond, 621

BANKS. See also EVIDENCE, 6; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 5; TAXES, 17, 18.

1. If a bank be accustomed to take special deposits of bonds and stocks, and this is known and acquiesced in by the directors, and the property thus deposited is lost by the gross carelessness of the bank, a liability ensues in like manner as if the deposit had been authorized by the terms of the charter. Manhattan Bank v. Walker, 959

2. The execution of a receipt or certificate by the assistant cashier, for a special deposit of bonds, and its transmission by the bank to the depositor, creates the relation of bailor and bailee between the latter and the bank, and makes it an act of gross negligence for the bank to deliver or dispose of or appropriate the securities without the depositor's direct authority. Id.

3. A bank had no right to deliver bonds specially deposited to the agent who deposited them for his principal, when it knew that he intended to deliver them to another bank as security for a loan to his firm, and also knew that such use of the bonds was an improper disposition of them; and such delivery for such use rendered the bank a party to the misappropriation of the bonds and liable to the depositor for their value. Id.

4. The appropriation, by a bank, of securities specially deposited, to the payment of a debt due to the bank by a firm in which the agent who made the deposit was a partner, at the request of such agent, but without authority of the depositor, is an unlawful appropriation. Id.

5. The statement in the receipt for bonds deposited with a bank, that the agent for the depositor had placed the securities with the bank on special deposit, is virtually a statement that the depositor, by such agent, had placed the securities with it on special deposit. Id.

6. Where securities are pledged to a banker for the payment of a particular loan or debt, he has no lien on the securities for a general balance or for the payment of other claims. Reynes v. Dumont, 934

7. A general lien in favor of a bank or banker may be implied from the usage of the business, but it does not arise upon securities accidentally in the possession of the bank, or not in its possession in the course of its business as such, or where the securities are in its hands under circumstances, or where there is a particular mode of dealing, inconsistent with such general lien. Id.

8. Bonds not lodged in the hands of a banker in the ordinary course of banking business, but for a specific purpose, and, when that purpose was accomplished, permitted to remain for safe keeping, are not subject to a banker's lien for the ultimate debit balance in favor of the banker against the parties who placed them there. Id.

9. It is sufficient, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5242, to invalidate a transfer by a national bank, that it was made in contemplation of insolvency, and either with a view to prevent the application of the assets of the bank in the manner prescribed by U. S. Rev. Stat. chap. 4, tit. 62, or with a view to the preference of one creditor to another. National Security Bank v. Butler, 682

10. A transfer of assets of a national bank to a creditor bank, made after the directors had voted that the bank should go into liquidation and should be closed, and that a receiver should be appointed, is void although, on the part of the creditor bank, there was no knowledge or suspicion at that time that the transferring bank was insolvent, or contemplated insolvency, or was not doing business, or that its directors had voted to close it, or that application was to be made for a receiver, and although the transfer took place before the application for a receiver was made. Id.

11. Any subsequent agreement between two national banks, made after the receiver of one of them has been actually appointed, cannot affect his rights. Id.

1. When the maker of a negotiable instrument lawfully cancels it before maturity, his liability upon it is extinguished, and cannot be revived without his consent. It is immaterial whether the cancellation is by destroying the instrument, or by writing or stamping words or lines in ink upon its face, provided the instrument, in the condition in which he puts it, unequivocally shows that it has been canceled. District of Columbia v. Cornell, 1041

2. A promissory note signed "Peninsular Cigar Co., Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," payable to the order of "Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," and indorsed "Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," is drawn by, payable to, and indorsed by, the corporation. Falk v. Moebs, 266

1. Under the Ohio statute requiring a guardian to give a bond, with "freehold sureties," on an application to sell real estate of the minor, the court may accept one surety only if he has sufficient property. Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 630

2. Overdue coupons detached from bonds before sale, and which remain the property of the company that issued the bonds, are not entitled to preference in payment, in the hands of an assignee, over the coupons sold by the company with the bonds and subsequently falling due. Wood v. Guarantee Trust & Safe Deposit Co. 472

3. Where coupons have matured before assignment of them, any defense which existed against them in the hands of the assignor is available against the assignee. Id.

4. Where the Legislature, being the source of exaction imposed upon the issuance of municipal bonds, has created a board authorized to determine whether such exaction has been complied with, its finding is conclusive as to a bona fide purchaser. Lake County v. Graham, 1065

5. Where the standard of the validity of municipal bonds is created by the Constitution, and in that standard two factors are to be considered,—one the amount of assessed value, and the other the ratio between that assessed value and the debt proposed,—these being exactions of the Constitution itself, it is not within the power of a Legislature to dispense with them, either directly or indirectly, by the creation of a ministerial commission whose finding shall be taken in lieu of the facts. Id.

6. If the fact necessary to the existence of municipal authority to issue bonds is by law ascertained, not officially by the officers charged with the execution of the power, but by reference to some express and definite record of a public character, then the authority to act will depend upon the existence of the requisite fact as shown by the record, and not upon its ascertainment and determination by anyone. All persons claiming under the exercise of such a power may be put to proof of the fact made a condition of its lawfulness, notwithstanding any recitals in the instrument. Id.

7. The purchaser of municipal bonds is held to know the constitutional provisions and the statutory restrictions bearing on the question of the authority to issue them; also the recitals of the bonds he buys; while on the other hand, if he acts in good faith and pays value, he is entitled to the protection of such recitals of facts as the bonds may contain. Id.

8. A recital in municipal or county bonds does not extend to or cover matters of law; and a certificate reciting the actual facts, and that thereby the bonds were conformable to the law, when, judicially speaking, they are not, will not make them so; nor can it work an estoppel upon the county to claim the protection of the law. Id.

9. Where the recitals of municipal bonds are merely to the effect that the statute has been fully complied with, and there is no recital that the constitutional requirements have been observed, there is no estoppel of the municipality as to constitutional questions. Id.

10. In a bond issued by a county in Colorado, no recital as to the amount of the assessed taxable valuation of the property to be taxed for the payment of the bonds can take the place of the assessment itself, where the amount as fixed by reference to that record is made by the Constitution the standard for measuring the limit of the municipal power, and the ascertainment of that fact is not submitted to the county officers. Id.

11. The issue of bonds by a county court under its seal, reciting that they are issued pursuant to an order of that court authorized by vote of the people; and the order appearing on the records of the court, showing that under and by virtue of the statute the county had issued and delivered the bonds; and the payment of interest on the bonds for several years,—estopped the county from urging, as against a bona fide holder of the bonds and coupons, the existence of any irregularity in the making of the subscription or the issuing of the bonds. Livingston County v. Portsmouth Nat. Bank, 359

12. Town bonds issued under the New York Act of 1871, in regard to the New York and Oswego Midland Railroad Company, without any previous action of the company designating all the counties through which would pass the road authorized by such Act of 1871 to be constructed, are issued without authority of law, and cannot be the foundation of a judgment against the town. Purdy v. Lansing, 531

13. In Illinois, under the Act of April 16,

1869, any condition imposed by a vote of a county as a condition precedent to the issuing of its bonds in payment of its subscription to the capital stock of a railroad company must have been complied with, in order to make such bonds valid and binding. German Sav. Bank v. Franklin County, 519

14. The Illinois Act of April 16, 1869, does not require that the state auditor shall determine or certify that county bonds have been regularly or legally issued; and the municipality issuing the bonds is not estopped by his registry or his certificate of registry. Id.

15. A savings bank which purchased bonds of a county in Illinois was, notwithstanding the recitals on the face of them, chargeable with notice of the provision of the Illinois Act of April 16, 1869, which had been in force before the date named on the face of the bonds as the date of the election, and before the date named on the bonds as the date of their issue, and also of the construction given to such statutory provision by the Supreme Court of Illinois prior to the issue of these bonds. Such interpretation of the Act of April 16 1869, accompanied all bonds subsequently issued, into the hands of whoever took them, whether a bona fide holder or not. Id.

16. The power of a municipal corporation to subscribe for stock in a railroad company, which must be expressly conferred by statute, does not carry with it the power to issue negotiable bonds in payment of the subscription. Kelley v. Milan, 77; Norton v. Dyersburg, 85

17. Tenn. Code, §§ 1142–1161, authorizing a municipality to subscribe for stock in railroads, does not authorize the issue of negotiable bonds. Id.

18. The Tennessee Act of June 23, 1871, does not confer any authority for the giving or loaning of credit upon any municipality, or confer the right upon any municipality to become a stockholder with others in any corporation. Id.

19. The Tennessee Act of March 23, 1872, authorized the issuing of bonds by municipalities for matured debts only. Kelley v. Milan, 77

20. The Tennessee Acts of Feb. 26, 1869, Dec. 16, 1871, and Feb. 8, 1870, do not authorize the issue of railroad-aid bonds by a municipality payable in ten years. Norton v. Dyersburg, 85

21. In an action against a town to recover on bonds issued in aid of a railroad, no question growing out of its liability for subscription to the stock can be inquired into. Id.

22. Under the Tennessee Act of Feb. 8, 1870, power was given to the city of Brownsville to tax, to pay interest on and create a sinking fund for the redemption of bonds authorized to be issued thereunder, but this power was abrogated by the new State Constitution of May 5, 1870. Brownsville Taxing Dist. v. League, 780

23. The Tennessee Act of Feb. 8, 1870, conferring upon the town of Brownsville the authority to issue corporation bonds in aid of railroads, cannot be availed of under the provisions of the Constitution of Tennessee which was adopted March 26, 1870, and went into effect May 6 in that year. Norton v. Brownsville Taxing Dist. 774

24. The proceedings resulting in the issue of bonds having been initiated May 11, 1870, five days after the Constitution went into effect, and the election held June 11 following, there was no authority to hold an election and to issue bonds, and their holders cannot recover. Id.

BOUNDARIES.

Owners of adjacent tracts of land are not bound by consent to a boundary which has been defined under a mistaken apprehension that it is the true line, each claiming only the true line wherever it may be found; and in such case neither party is precluded or estopped from claiming his own rights under the true one, when discovered. Schræder Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Packer, 760

BRIBERY.

N. Y. Pen. Code, § 72, relating to bribery, governs only cases committed after the Penal Code took effect. Jaehne v. New York, 398

BROKERS. See also DAMAGES, 3.

1. In the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, it is the principal's judgment, and not that of the broker, that is to control in the purchase and sale of stocks. Galigher v. Jones, 658

2. A broker is but an agent, and is bound to follow the directions of his principal, or give notice that he declines to continue the agency. Id.

3. Where the principal directs his broker, by telegram, to change one stock into another, the broker should give prompt notice by telegram if he refuses to make the change; and a delay caused by notifying the principal by mail is inexcusable, and the broker is liable to his principal for the damage sustained thereby. Id.

4. Where the broker sells stock of his principal and reports the sale to the latter, if he expresses no dissatisfaction with the sale at the time, he is not entitled to damages on account of the sale. Id.

CARRIERS. See also INSURANCE, 12, 13.

1. The right of a passenger to be carried upon a railroad upon a "tourist's" or "round-trip" ticket depends upon the written contract signed by him thereon, and not upon representations made by an officer of the company. Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 249

2. Where, by the contract, a stamp upon a ticket, made by an agent, was a condition precedent to the right to a return passage, no agent or employé of the railroad company was authorized to waive the condition. Id.

3. Where, by the contract contained on plaintiff's ticket, the defendant company is not to be responsible beyond its own line, it is not responsible to the plaintiff for the failure of another company to have an agent at the further end of the route. Id.

4. The owner of a general ship carrying goods for hire in internal, coasting, or foreign commerce, is a common carrier, with the liability of an insurer against losses, except from irresistible causes—as the act of God and public enemies. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 788

5. An exception in the bill of lading of perils of the sea or other specific perils does not exempt the carrier from liability for loss or damage from one of those perils to which the negligence of himself or his servants has contributed. Id.

6. The clause in a bill of lading, that the carrier should not be responsible for loss or damage by the perils of the sea arising from the negligence of the master and crew of the ship, did not relieve him from such responsibility. Id.

7. An express stipulation by any common carrier for hire, in a contract of carriage, that he shall be exempt from liability for losses caused by the negligence of himself or his servants, is unreasonable and contrary to public policy, and consequently void. Id.; Inman v. South Carolina R. Co. 612

8. Refusal by a shipper to enter into a contract that the carrier shall not be liable unless the owner shall insure for its benefit is no defense to an action to compel transportation by the carrier. Inman v. South Carolina R. Co. 612

9. A bill of lading providing that, if the carrier becomes liable for loss of the goods, it shall have the benefit of any insurance which may have been effected thereon, does not compel the owner to insure for the carrier's benefit; but if at the time of the loss the owner has any insurance available to the carrier, which he wrongfully refuses to allow the carrier the benefit of, the latter is entitled to a counterclaim therefor. Id.

10. A common carrier is not estopped from denying that it has clothed its agent with apparent authority to do the act, where he, having authority to sign bills of lading, has, acting by collusion with another person solely for a purpose of their own, issued a bill of lading for goods which never came into the possession of the carrier. Friedlander v. Texas & Pac. R. Co. 991

11. The agent of a railroad company at one of its stations cannot bind the company by the execution of a bill of lading for goods not actually placed in his possession, and by its delivery to a person fraudulently pretending, in collusion with such agent, that he had shipped such goods in favor of a party without notice, with whom, in furtherance of the fraud, the pretended shipper negotiates a draft, with the false bill of lading attached. Id.

12. The legislature of a State has the power to prescribe the charges of a railroad company for the carriage of persons and merchandise within its limits, in the absence of any provision in the charter of the company constituting a contract vesting in it authority over these matters, subject to the limitation that the carriage is not required without reward or upon conditions amounting to the taking of property for public use without just compensation, and that what is done does not amount to a regulation of foreign or interstate commerce. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 877

CASES CERTIFIED.

1. The question certified to the Supreme Court of the United States upon a difference of opinion between the judges of the circuit court must be a distinct point or proposition of law clearly stated, so that it can be definitely answered without regard to the other issues of law or fact in the case. Fire Ins. Asso. v. Wickham, 508

2. It must be a question of law only, and not a question of fact or of mixed law and fact; it must not involve or imply a conclusion or judgment upon the weight or effect of testimony or facts adduced in the cause,—as, for example, a question of fraud. Id.

3. It must not embrace the whole case, even when its decision turns upon matters of law only, and even though it be split up into the form of questions. Id.

4. The question whether parol evidence may or may not be introduced to explain such documents as those which were given in evidence by the defendant presents a single point of law, the documents being of the same general character and offered to prove the same fact. Id.

5. A question which asks the United States Supreme Court to decide whether, upon all the evidence in the case, the defendant was entitled to a verdict, cannot be properly certified to that court. Id.

6. The Supreme Court of the United States cannot take jurisdiction of a case upon certificate of division of opinion, where, besides the manifest attempt to refer to it for decision substantially the whole case by the device of splitting it up into several questions, neither of the questions certified presents a distinct point or proposition of law clearly and precisely stated. Dublin Twp. v. Milford Five Cent Sav. Inst. 588

7. A question certified as to whether the parties are entitled in law to recover judgment on a special verdict is too general to be answered, because the entire case is thus referred to the court. Hosford v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 196

8. A case which the court has no power to reconsider at the term following judgment is not one for a division of opinion, in which either the court or the circuit judge (who did not sit upon the trial) has any power to act. United States v. Pile, 904

CERTIORARI. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 84.

1. A writ of certiorari, when its object is to bring up after judgment the proceedings of an inferior court or tribunal whose procedure is not according to the course of the common law, is in the nature of a writ of error. Harris v. Barber, 697

2. Although the granting of the writ of certiorari rests in the discretion of the court, yet, after the writ has been granted and the record certified in obedience to it, the questions arising upon that record must be determined according to fixed rules of law; and their determination is reviewable on error. Id

3. As, by the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, an appeal lies from the judgment of a justice of the peace, his proceedings cannot be quashed by writ of certiorari, unless for want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of his record. Harris v. Barber, 697

CLAIMS. See also COURTS, 7, 9; INTEREST, 3, 4; PATENTS, 69.

1. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3477, relating to the transfer of claims against the United States, does not prevent a lessor of the United States from devoting the rent to the payment of his debts by an assignment recognized by the government. Freedman's Sav. Bank & Trust Co. v. Shepherd, 168

2. The assignment of a lease in which the United States is lessee is not void, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3737, relating to the transfer of contracts with the United States. Id.

3. The Act of Congress of July 8, 1886, referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication claims for property impressed into the service of the United States in 1857 by orders of Colonel Johnston, in the Utah expedition, as well as for property alleged to have been sold to the government, does not embrace allowances for losses consequent upon the refusal of Colonel Johnston to permit plaintiff's trains to proceed upon their journey, arising from the mere delay and detention caused thereby. United States v. Irwin, 99

4. The Act of Congress of Feb. 26, 1885, for the relief of Joseph H. Cumming and others, gave the Court of Claims jurisdiction of the particular demand named therein, and authorized it to give such judgment as, under the evidence, would be consistent with law. Congress thereby intended that the court should determine the liability of the government by the settled principles of law. The only right waived by the government was a defense based upon the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment against the United States in any sum for the wrongs complained of; for, if the revenue officers whose acts caused the injury did nothing more than the law authorized them to do, neither they nor the government would be liable in damages; while, if they acted illegally, they would be personally liable in damages, not the government. United States v. Cumming, 1029

COMMERCE.

1. A statute prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicating liquors is not invalid as a regulation of commerce because it does not except from its operation liquors manufactured for export. Kidd v. Pearson, 846

2. The law of Texas requiring every commercial traveler or drummer to obtain a license and to pay a tax therefor is unconstitutional and void when applied to citizens of other States soliciting trade in Texas. Asher v. Texas, 368

3. Iowa Code, § 4059, making the owner of Texas cattle which have not been wintered north liable for any damages from allowing them to run at large and to spread Texas fever, does not conflict with the paramount authority of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Kimmish v. Ball, 695

4. State legislation as to qualifications, duties, and liabilities of employés on railway trains engaged in interstate commerce, to provide against accidents on trains while within the State, is valid in the absence of legislation on that subject by Congress. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 352

5. An assessment, by the State Board of Equalization of California, of all the franchises of a railroad company, including franchises conferred by the United States for constructing a railroad from the Pacific Ocean across the State as well as across the Territories of the United States, and of taking toll thereon, is repugnant to the commercial clause of the United States Constitution. California v. Central Pac. R. Co. 150

6. Congress may, in the exercise of its power to regulate interstate commerce, construct, or authorize individuals or corporations to construct, railroads across the States and Territories of the United States. Id.

7. The telegraph is an instrument of commerce. Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 229

8. A single tax, assessed under a state statute, upon the receipts of a telegraph company derived from interstate and domestic commerce, and returned and assessed without separation and apportionment, is invalid only in proportion to the extent that such receipts were derived from interstate commerce. Id.

9. A tax on interstate commerce, distinguishable from the tax on domestic commerce, will alone be restrained. Id.

10. Where a telegraph company transmits messages between different States, and has accepted, and is acting under, the telegraph law passed by Congress July 24, 1866, no State in which it does business can require it to take out a license for the transaction thereof. Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 311

11. Telegraphic communications carried on between different States are interstate commerce; and any state tax on the business is unconstitutional. Id.

12. A general license tax on a telegraph company doing business in different States affects its entire business, interstate as well as domestic, and is unconstitutional. Id.

13. The property of a telegraph company, situated within a State, may be taxed therein as all other property is taxed; but its business of an interstate character cannot be taxed. Id.

14. A State cannot tax a telegraph company on messages sent, except where they are transmitted wholly within the State. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 345

15. An assessment of the steamers of a railroad company by the State Board of Equalization in California is in violation of the Constitution and void, and, being inseparably blended with the other property assessed, the whole assessment is void. California v. Central Pac. R. Co. 150

16. Franchises conferred by Congress cannot, without its permission, be taxed by the State. Id.

COMMISSIONERS.

A United States commissioner who keeps a docket by direction of the court appointing him, and enters therein the proceedings in criminal cases heard and decided by him, is entitled to the same fees allowed to clerks of courts by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 828. United States v. Knox, 465

CONFLICT OF LAWS. See also ADMIRALTY, 1.

1. The nature, the obligation, and the interpretation of a contract are to be governed by the law of the place where it is made, unless the parties at the time of making it have some other law in view. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 788

2. A contract of affreightment made in one country between citizens or residents thereof, and the performance of which begins there, must be governed by the law of that country, unless the parties, when entering into the contract, clearly manifest a mutual intention that it shall be governed by the law of some other country. Id.

3. That goods shipped were to be delivered by a carrier at Liverpool, and the freight and primage were payable there in sterling currency, and that the vessel was stranded on the coast of Great Britain, do not make the contract an English contract, or refer to the English law the question of the liability of the carrier for the negligence of the master and the crew in the course of the voyage. Id.

4. The rights and benefits given to the beneficiary in an insurance policy by the laws of the State where it is issued are as much a part of the contract as if incorporated therein. Washington Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 370

5. If a person sends his property within a jurisdiction other than that where he resides, he impliedly submits it to the rules and regulations enforced in the country where he places it. Walworth v. Harris, 712

6. Although a court of one State will give effect to the law of domicil of another State, yet this is a mere principle of comity between the courts, which must give way when the statutes of a country where the property is situated, or the established policy of its laws, prescribe to its court a different rule. Id.

7. The acknowledgment and recording of conveyances by husband and wife, of lands in Virginia, in the mode described by the laws of that State, is essential to pass the estate of the wife in such land. Sewall v. Haymaker, 299

8. The statute of New York on the subject of actions for death by negligence does not apply to a case where the death did not occur within the State of New York, or in waters subject to its jurisdiction. Metcalfe v. The Alaska, 923

9. Statutes of limitation of the State govern personal actions in the courts of the United States. Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 1080

CONGRESS.

Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 51, a person elected a member of Congress to fill the vacancy made by unseating a member who, after having received the proper credentials, and been placed on the rolls, and sworn in, and taken his seat, and served and drawn his salary, was declared by the House not elected and his seat vacant, is entitled to compensation only from the time the compensation of such member ceased. Page v. United States, 65

1. A judicial department need not give effect to statutory enactments forbidden by the Constitution. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 258

2. If the words of a constitutional provision convey a definite meaning which involves no absurdity and no contradiction of other parts of the instrument, then that meaning, apparent on the face of the instrument, must be accepted. Lake County v. Rollins, 1060

3. Constitutions operate prospectively only, unless on their face the contrary intention is manifest beyond reasonable question. Shreveport v. Cole, 589

4. Where property and employment is affected with a public use, the business in which it is used is subject to legislative control in all respects necessary to protect the public against danger, injustice, and oppression. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 377

5. A general law for the punishment of offenses, which endeavors to reach, by its retroactive operation, acts previously committed, as well as to prescribe a rule of conduct for the citizen in future, is void in so far as it is retrospective; but such invalidity will not affect its operation in regard to future cases. Jaehne v. New York, 398

6. The state law prohibiting the manufacture of liquors does not deprive the owners of a distillery of their property without due process of law. Kidd v. Pearson, 346

7. The Alabama statute disqualifying persons who are color-blind from certain service on railroads, and providing for their examination, and providing a fine upon any company employing any person for such service without a certificate from examiners, is not invalid as a regulation of commerce or as depriving any person of property without due process of law. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 352

8. Requiring a railroad company to pay fees for examining persons for certain railroad service does not deprive them of property without due process of law. Id.

9. A state statute making it a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment to practice medicine without a certificate from the state board of health that the practitioner is a graduate of a reputable medical college is not unconstitutional as depriving him of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Dent v. West Virginia, 623

10. Legislation is not open to the charge of depriving one of his rights without due process of law, if it be general in its operation upon the subjects to which it relates, and is enforceable by usual methods adapted to the nature of the case. Id.

11. The statute of Missouri authorizing a special administrator who has charge of a decedent's estate during a contest of the will to have a final settlement of his accounts, conclusive on the distributees, without notifying them, is not repugnant to the constitutional provision as to due process of law, as the regular representative of the estate has opportunity to contest the account. RoBards v. Lamb, 60

12. Whenever, by the laws of a State or by state authority, a tax is imposed upon property for the public use, and those laws provide for a mode of contesting the charge thus imposed, in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding in regard to the property, as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. Walston v. Nevin, 544

13. The Kentucky statute of 1882 to amend the charter of the city of Louisville, so far as it authorizes the cost of the improvements of streets to be assessed against the owners of lots, and gives a lien thereon, is not in conflict with U. S. Const. 14th Amend. § 1, as amounting to a deprivation of property without due process of law, and a denial of the equal protection of the laws. Id.

14. Whenever the law operates alike upon all persons and property similarly situated, equal protection cannot be said to be denied. Id.

15. Publication of a proper notice of proceedings to lay out and assess damages for land to be taken for a railroad is due process of law; and if a nonresident, by failing to take measures to be represented in the disposal of his property, is not represented, he cannot complain. Huling v. Kaw Valley R. & Imp. Co. 1045

16. A state law making a railroad company liable to an employé for the negligence of a coemployé does not conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 107; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 109

17. Special legislation is not obnoxious to the last clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, if all persons subject to it are treated alike. Id.

18. Corporations are persons, within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. Id.

19. The Pennsylvania statute of May 21, 1885, prohibiting the adulteration of dairy products, etc., is a valid exercise of the police power, and is not repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 258; Walker v. Pennsylvania, 261

20. Whether the manufacture of oleomargarine involves such danger to the public health as to require its entire suppression is a question for the determination of the legislative department, whose determination is conclusive upon the courts unless the statute infringes rights secured by the fundamental law. Id.

21. Although a statute suppressing the manufacture of oleomargarine may be unnecessarily oppressive to those manufacturing or selling wholesome oleomargarine as an article of food, yet the courts cannot interfere; the appeal must be to the Legislature or to the ballot-box. Id.

22. The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution does not interfere with the exercise of the police power by the State for the protection of health and the prevention of fraud. Id.

23. No privileges or immunities of citizens are affected by Iowa Code, § 4059, making owners of Texas cattle liable for allowing them to run at large and spread Texas fever. Kimmish v. Ball, 695

24. Iowa Code, § 1289, which provides that a railway corporation which neglects to pay for stock injured or killed for want of a fence on the side of its road shall be liable for double the value of the stock killed, or of the damages, is not in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 585

CONTEMPT.

1. The power to punish for contempt is inherent in a court. Re Terry, 405

2. A breach of the peace in open court is a direct disturbance and a palpable contempt of the authority of the court. Id.

3. It is competent for the circuit court, immediately upon the commission in its presence of such a contempt, to proceed upon its own knowledge of the facts and punish the offender, without further proof and without issue or trial in any form. Id.

4. The retirement of the petitioner from the court room into another room of the same building, after he had been guilty of misbehavior in the presence of the court and had violently obstructed execution of its order, did not defeat the jurisdiction which it possessed to order on the same day his immediate imprisonment, without other proof than that supplied by its actual knowledge and view of the facts, and without examination or trial in any form. Id.

CONTRACTS. See also DAMAGES, 1, 2; NOTICE, 2.

1. A person cannot recover for services for procuring a contract to be entered into which is forbidden by statute or by public policy, where he is privy to the unlawful design of the parties. Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 979

2. A corporation cannot disable itself by contract from performing the public duties which it has undertaken, or by agreement compel itself to make public accommodation subservient to its private interests. Id.

3. The supplying of illuminating gas is a business of a public nature, to meet a public necessity; and where such business cannot be restrained without prejudice to the public interest, contracts imposing such restraints, however partial, will not be enforced or sustained, because in contravention of public policy. Id.

4. An agreement between two gas companies of the same city, for the abandonment by one of the companies of the discharge of its duties to the public, and that the price of gas as fixed thereby shall not be changed below a certain specified rate without the consent of the other, where one of the companies is prohibited by statute from entering into such a contract, is an illegal contract. Id.

5. Where a contract was with an employé of a railroad company to induce such employé to disregard its obligations, and the principal person making that contract on the part of the employé was a director and stockholder of the railroad company to be affected thereby, the contract is void. Woodstock Iron Co. v. Richmond & D. Extension Co. 819

6. All arrangements by which directors or stockholders or other persons may acquire gain by inducing corporations to disregard their duties to the public, are illegal and lead to unfair dealing, and, being against public policy, will not be enforced by the court. Id.

7. A contract by an extension company,—an employé of a railroad company,—with a third party, for a consideration to be received from that third party, to violate its engagement with its employer in locating and constructing a railroad, and, instead of selecting the shortest, cheapest, and most suitable route, to locate the road by a longer route, and thus impose an unnecessary burden upon its employer, is a void contract, immoral in its conception and corrupting in its tendency. Id.

8. The transaction on the part of such third party is none the less offensive, because of the threats of the extension company, that if the consideration was not received by such company it would cause the road to be located on a different route. Id.

9. The breach of a parol promise as to an interest in land does not constitute such fraud as will take a case out of the Statute of Frauds. Moore v. Crawford, 878

10. Where one purchases and takes the title of land in his own name, but with the intention and under the verbal promise to convey it to another, upon consideration that she should take care of him during the remainder of his life, as she had done in the past, and places her in possession of the property, and she does so take care of him during his life, she is entitled to a specific performance of the promise and to a conveyance of the title to her, after his death, by his executors and trustees. Brown v. Sutton, 664

11. Where a railway company orally agreed upon the exchange of lands with an individual, although the contract, for want of the signature of the corporation or its agents, was void under the Statute of Frauds, yet possession taken of the several parcels in pursuance of the contract, and continued ever since, and expenditures for buildings and other improvements upon the respective parcels, constitute a part performance sufficient to take the contract out of the operation of the statute, and authorize a decree for its full performance. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 673

12. The fact that possession of land by a railroad company was taken before the ratification of the contract by resolution of the board of directors of the company did not impair the effect of that possession as an act of part performance. Id.

13. Where, before the signing of a written instrument, it was agreed between the parties thereto that it was to be of no effect unless, upon consultation with counsel named, the defendants should be assured that the transaction out of which it arose was lawful, proof that they were advised by such counsel that such transaction was illegal shows that the instrument never went into effect and the condition upon which it was to become operative never occurred. Ware v. Allen, 563

14. Covenants are to be considered dependent or independent, according to the intention of the parties, to be deduced from the whole instrument. Pollak v. Brush Electric Asso. 474

15. The action of a city council adopting the recommendation of its committee to renew a contract, and payments thereon by it, may be held to operate as an effective renewal of the contract with the city, although such renewal was not evidenced by a written contract covering a fixed period of time. Id.

16. A court cannot interpolate a stipulation into a contract which is not implied therein, and where the surrounding circumstances do not authorize or require a construction of the contract that would import such a stipulation into it. Robbins v. Clark, 292

17. The court is bound to give effect to the stipulations in a charter-party, but not to provisions which the parties deliberately omitted to insert after the omission was made known to them. Culliford v. Vinet, 381

18. The obligation of a contract for exchange of lands with a railroad company was not impaired by the fact that, when notified the company would not complete the exchange, the other party wrote asking when the company would be ready to remove its track from the lands and come to a settlement for its use. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 673

19. A contract for granite, whereby the United States agrees to pay for labor, tools, and materials, "and insurance on the same," does not create a liability for any insurance where none was in fact effected or paid for by the contractor. Tillson v. United States, 686

20. A contract whereby the United States assumed the risk of "damage to cutting on said stone while being transported" does not make the United States liable for a loss by a peril of the sea during transportation. Id.

21. Where a contract for street improvement in Washington fixes the prices for paving and excavation at so much a yard, the contractor cannot charge for extra work for stone or rock found in the excavation. Barnard v. District of Columbia, 207

22. Where a contract for carrying the mails was subject to the provisions of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. at L. 558, chap. 281; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4002), which authorized the Postmaster-General to readjust the compensation to be paid therefor, graduated by the weight of the mail; and by subsequent Acts such officer was directed to and did readjust such compensation, giving due notice of the readjustment to the contractor,—the latter having received the reduced compensation for continued service, without protest or objection, must be held to have accepted it in full, and cannot recover the difference between the amounts actually received by him and the amount he would have received under the contract before the readjustment. Eastern R. Co. v. United States, 730

23. Where there was an agreement by plaintiff to furnish machinery and to put it in operation in defendant's mill, and one installment of the price was to be paid on the delivery of the machinery and before the completion of the work, and where the completion is not according to contract, defendant need not, in order to entitle him to avoid paying the whole contract price, or in order to recover damages for plaintiff's breach of contract, take out the machinery and interrupt his business to obtain new machinery elsewhere. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 1035

24. Where two parties who severally hold liens upon personal property agree that the same may be sold and delivered to a third person, and the proceeds of the sale divided between them in certain proportions, neither can thereafter insist upon superiority of lien, as between themselves. City Nat. Bank v. Hunter, 752

25. Where there was an agreement for the postponement of the payment and to pay interest on the purchase money, acceptance of a partial payment and demand for performance shows that the contract had not been abandoned. Brown v. Guarantee Trust & Safe Deposit Co. 468

26. Time may be made of the essence of the contract; but it must affirmatively appear that the parties regarded time as an essential element in their agreement, or a court of equity will not so regard it. Id.

27. In a suit in equity to set aside a contract and conveyances by which lands were exchanged, for false and fraudulent representations, where the evidence shows that, in making the exchange, no reliance was placed upon the representations, but that the party acted upon his own judgment and upon information obtained from third persons, no ground is shown for maintaining the suit. Shields v. Hanbury, 565

28. If a case of fraud be established, equity will set aside all transactions founded upon it, by whatever machinery or contrivances they may have been effected, whether such machinery or contrivances consist of a decree of equity and a purchase under it, or of a judgment at law, or of other transactions between the actors in the fraud. Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 630

29. The inhibition of the Constitution against impairing the obligation of contracts is wholly prospective; the States may legislate as to contracts thereafter made, as they see fit. It is only those in existence when the hostile law is passed that are protected from its effect. Denny v. Bennett, 491

30. State statutes limiting the right of a creditor to enforce his claims against the property of his debtor, which are in existence at the time a contract is made, are not void as impairing the obligation of the contract. Id.

31. The rights of antecedent creditors are protected by the Constitution of the United States against any impairment by changes in the provisions of a State Constitution. Shreveport v. Cole, 589

32. There is nothing on the face of La. Const. 1879, art. 208, evidencing an intention that it should be applied to antecedent contracts. Id.

33. A railroad corporation is a private corporation, although its uses are public; and a contract embodied in terms in its charter, or necessarily implied by it, is within the constitutional prohibition against impairing the obligation of contracts Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 377

34. A grant of the power of taxation by the Legislature to a municipal corporation is subject to revocation, modification, and control by the Legislature of the State. Williamson v. New Jersey, 915

1. No authority exists for obtaining a copyright beyond the extent to which Congress has authorized it. A copyright cannot be sustained as a right existing at common law. Banks v. Manchester, 425

2. Where the opinion or decision of the court, and also the statement of the case and the syllabus or headnote, are exclusively the work of the judges of the court, the reporter of such court is not the author of any part of such matter, and he cannot obtain a copyright therefor for the benefit of the State. Id.

3. Where a copyright is taken out for the State by the reporter of a court, for matter of which he is not the author, it is to be regarded as if it had been taken out in the name of the State. Id.

4. The judge who, in his judicial capacity, prepares the opinion or decision, the statement of the case, or the syllabus or headnote, cannot be regarded as their author or their proprietor, in the sense of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4952, so as to be able to confer any title by assignment on the State sufficient to authorize it to take a copyright for such matter, under that section, as the assignee of the author or proprietor. Id.

5. Judges can themselves have no pecuniary interest or proprietorship, as against the public at large, in the fruits of their judicial labors; and no copyright can, under the statutes passed by Congress, be secured in the products of the labor done by judicial officers in the discharge of their judicial duties. Id.

6. The reporter of a volume of law reports can, in the absence of a prohibitory statute, obtain a copyright for the volume as an author; and such copyright will cover the parts of the book of which he is the author, although he has no exclusive right in the judicial opinions published or the work done by the judges, and although he is a public officer and receives a salary or compensation from the State. Callaghan v. Myers, 547

7. The facts that, although volumes of law reports as edited by defendants in an action for infringement are condensed from the volumes of the original reporter belonging to plaintiff, yet the paging of the cases in both editions is the same; that the list of cases which precedes each report is the same; that it appears by comparison that all the volumes of the original reporter were used throughout in editing and annotating defendants' volumes; that words and sentences were copied without change or changed only in form; that although there appears to be independent labor by defendants' editors, yet, for a large portion of the work performed by them they did not resort to original sources, but obtained their information from plaintiff's volumes; that although the headnotes of the two editions differ, yet it is apparent that the headnotes of plaintiff's volumes have been freely used in the preparation of the headnotes of defendants' volumes,—establish that the defendants have, in the preparation of their volumes, used the volumes of the plaintiff so as to interfere with his copyright. Id.

8. In an action for the infringement of copyrighted law reports, the fact that the alleged infringing volumes, in the arrangement of the order of cases and in the paging, followed the copyrighted edition, although of itself not sufficient to warrant a decree against defendants, yet, in connection with proof, by comparison of the volumes, that the copyrighted edition had been used by defendants in the headnotes, the statements of facts, and the arguments of counsel; and that in every volume prepared by defendants there were unmistakable indicia that they had not confined themselves solely to the original sources of information,—namely, the opinions of the judges, the records, and the arguments of counsel; and that errors in the copyrighted edition were copied in defendants' volumes in numerous instances,—was sufficient to prove infringement. Id.

9. The three conditions prescribed by the statute—namely: the deposit before publication of the printed copy of the title of the book, the giving of information of the copyright by the insertion of the notice on the title page or the next page, and the depositing of a copy of the book within three months after the publication —are conditions precedent to the perfection of the copyright. Id.

10. Where the certificate of the clerk shows that the printed title was deposited by "E. B. Myers & Chandler," and the printed notice of the entry of copyright in the volume as published purports to show that the copyright was entered by E. B. Myers alone, the variance is immaterial. Id.

11. The delivery of the copies of a volume of law reports to the Secretary of State, for the use of the State, as required by the Illinois statute, is a publication of the volume; and, where the deposit of it in the clerk's office did not take place until three months and fifteen days after such publication, the deposit of the work was not made in time, and the copyright fails. Id.

12. Where the title was deposited Jan. 28, 1867, and the notice printed in the volume purports to show that the copyright was entered in 1866, the variance was held immaterial as causing no injury. Id.

13. While, after the obtaining of a copyright, a written assignment may be necessary to convey title to it, or a written license to give a right to reproduce copies of the copyrighted book, one may become the owner, by a parol transfer, of whatever right the author, prior to the taking of the copyright, had to convey. Id.

14. That defendants recognized plaintiff's copyrights by offering to purchase them is inconsistent with consent and abandonment. Id.

CORPORATIONS. See also CONTRACTS, 2, 4, 6; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 8, 9; PUBLIC LANDS, 8.

1. Exemption from legislative interference, given by charter, must appear by such clear and unmistakable language that it cannot be reasonably construed consistently with the reservation of the power by the State. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 377

2. In grants by the public, nothing passes by implication. In doubtful points the construction of the grant must be against the grantee. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregonian R. Co. 837

3. A corporation formed under the laws of Oregon cannot assume to itself powers of action by the mere declaration in its articles of association that it possesses them. Id.

4. Unless specially authorized by its charter or by Act of the Legislature, a railroad company cannot, by lease or contract, turn over to another company, for a long time, its road and all its appurtenances, the use of its franchises, and the exercise of its powers; nor can another railroad company, without similar authority, contract to receive and operate such road, franchises, and property of such corporation. Such a contract is not among the ordinary powers of a railroad company, and is not to be presumed from the usual grant of powers in a railroad charter. Id.

5. The powers of corporations are such, and such only, as are conferred on them by the Acts of the legislatures of the several States under which they are organized. Id.

6. A contract by which the railway company demised its road, privileges, and franchises for ninety-six years to the defendant does not, by its performance for three years of the term, become so far an executed contract that a party thereto is estopped to deny its validity and to refuse to continue its performance. Id.

7. Where a railway company subsequently consolidated with another company, under a new name, transferred its property to the new company, subject to all charges, liens, and equities to which it was before subject, such new company is under obligation to complete a valid existing contract for the conveyance of land. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 673

8. If a corporation negligently cancels a person's stock and issues certificates therefor to a third party, the true owner need not pursue such purchaser, but may proceed against the corporation to obtain the replacement of his stock or its value. St. Romes v. Levee Steam Cotton Press Co. 289

9. The fact that property received by a corporation in payment for stock, after it was reconveyed to the stockholders, was sold by them at prices which, if the company could have obtained them, would have made its retention advisable, does not alter the transaction. Fort Madison Bank v. Alden, 725

10. Where the charter of a corporation authorizes its capital stock to be paid for in property, and the shareholders honestly and in good faith put in property, instead of money, in payment of their subscription, third parties have no ground of complaint. Id.

11. A reconveyance of lands conveyed to a corporation in payment for stock, to the stockholders (the original owners), upon their resolution, cannot deprive a creditor of the corporation not consenting thereto of his right to compel the application of that property to the payment of the corporate debts. Id.

12. A stockholder who has consented to the disposition of corporate property by reconveyance to the stockholders, and has himself participated in its appropriation, is estopped from claiming that the property must be applied to the payment of corporate debts, in a suit to enforce his individual liability for the corporate debts. Id.

13. Where full-paid stock is issued by a corporation for property received in payment of subscriptions, there must be actual fraud in the transaction, to enable creditors of the corporation to make the stockholders liable therefor. Id.

14. A suit in the name of the stockholders in behalf of a corporation to recover its property is not maintainable, unless sufficient reason is shown for bringing it in their name. Taylor v. Holmes, 179

15. It is not a sufficient reason for bringing a suit in the name of some of the stockholders in behalf of a corporation, to recover its property, that the corporation is extinguished by limitation in its charter, where, by the laws of the State, its existence was continued thereafter for the purpose of winding up its business. Id.

16. It is not a sufficient reason for bringing a suit in the name of some of the stockholders in behalf of a corporation, to recover its property, that many of its directors are dead, where part of them have survived, and no application has been made to them to bring the suit, and no effort made to call the stockholders together to elect directors or to obtain united action. Id.

COSTS.

The United States Supreme Court should, as against intervenors in a cause who have given bonds to pay costs, enforce their payment by attachment, without remitting the payees in the bond to another suit in another court. Craig v. Leitensdorfer, 322

COUNTIES. See also BONDS, 10; COURTS, 40, 41; MANDAMUS, 11; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

1. The Legislature cannot impose upon a county a compulsion to incur debt; nor can a county voluntarily assume it, as against the disability of a constitutional prohibition. Lake County v. Rollins, 1060

2. Colo. Const. art. 11, § 6, is a limitation upon the power of the county to contract any and all indebtedness, including the county warrants for county expenses sued upon in this action. Id.

3. A county in Colorado cannot be made liable for a debt contracted above the amount fixed by the constitutional limitation, although the debt is for ordinary county expenses, evidenced by county warrants. Id.

COURT OF CLAIMS. See COURTS, 10–12.

COURTS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 52–55; PARTITION; PUBLIC LANDS, 9, 10.

1. A common-law action for trespass, by the owner of one vessel against the owner of another for damages by fire, is not within the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty. Chappell v. Bradshaw, 369

2. A state court has jurisdiction of a suit against an association to compel the cancellation of a mortgage which has been paid, although the United States Circuit Court has appointed a receiver of such association. Calhoun v. Lanaux, 297

3. U. S. Const. art. 3, providing for the trial of all crimes in the State where they are committed, applies only to trials in federal courts, and not to trials in state courts. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 352

4. An assignee in bankruptcy, although he may bring suit in the District Court of the United States to set aside a conveyance in fraud of the bankrupt's creditors, is not precluded from bringing such suit in a state court. McKenna v. Simpson, 771

5. The provisions of the Constitution and of the Act of Congress by which the judgments of one State are to have faith and credit given to them in another State, do not affect the jurisdiction of the court in which the judgment is rendered, or of that in which it is offered in evidence. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 289

6. The jurisdiction of the court in which an indictment is found is not impaired by the manner in which the accused is brought before it. Mahon v. Justice, 288

7. No jurisdiction is given to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia of a suit against the United States or a public officer for the specific performance of a contract made by the United States. United States, Levey, v. Stockslager, 785

8. The Police Court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction of infamous crimes punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary. Callan v. Wilson, 228

9. The Court of Claims has jurisdiction to entertain a claim for compensation from the United States for the use of a patented invention, where the claim arises upon an implied contract. United States v. Palmer, 442

10. The Act of Congress of July 8, 1886, referring to the Court of Claims, for adjudication, claims for property impressed into the service of the United States in 1857 by orders of Colonel Johnston in the Utah expedition, authorizes the court to give a final judgment against the United States. United States v. Irwin, 99

11. There must be a direct connection between a treaty and a claim against the United States, in order to exclude the latter from the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1066. United States v. Weld, 62

12. A suit against the United States for an unsatisfied part of a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff in the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, which had been illegally withheld from him by the Secretary of the Treasury, is not a case growing out of the Treaty of Washington, within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1066. Id.

13. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 846, requiring accounts of commissioners and others to be examined and certified by the district judge before they are presented to the treasury department for settlement, and making no provisions for a refusal by the court to act upon such claim, on such refusal the claimant is not required to present his claim to the treasury department before bringing suit in the Court of Claims. United States v. Knox, 465

14. The District Court of the United States can try an Indian who has committed murder in a Territory only when sitting to administer the laws of the Territory and exercising the functions of a territorial court, and not while exercising its functions as a court of the United States administering its laws. Re Gon-Shay-ee, 978

15. The District Court of the United States has jurisdiction of an offense against the election laws of a State and the United States, by a conspiracy to violate the same. Ex parte Coy, 274

16. The Circuit Court of the United States has not jurisdiction of an offense committed within the judicial district by an Indian. Re Captain Jack, 976

17. The Circuit Courts of the United States have jurisdiction in suits brought by the United States to set aside and cancel patents for inventions, for frauds committed by the parties to whom they were issued. United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 450

18. Where defendant and complainants are citizens of the same State, and the bill does not allege that the trademark in controversy was used on goods intended to be transported to a foreign country (Act March 3, 1881, chap. 138, § 11; 21 Stat. at L. 502), the circuit court has no jurisdiction. Ryder v. Holt, 529

19. The Circuit Court of the United States has no jurisdiction of a suit founded on contract in favor of an assignee, where it does not appear that the plaintiff's assignor could have brought suit on the contract if no assignment had been made. Brock v. Northwestern Fuel Co. 905

20. A suit founded on a judgment is one founded on a contract, within the meaning of the Act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 470, chap. 137), determining the jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of the United States, and making the right of the assignee to sue depend upon the right of his assignors to have brought suit in that court, if no assignment had been made. Metcalf v. Watertown, 543

21. An action to recover the amount of a mortgage bond is not within the jurisdiction of the circuit court when brought by an assignee thereof, in a case in which the assignor could not have sued. Blacklock v. Small, 70

22. A corporation is a citizen of a State, within the United States Constitution and statutes which define the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 289

23. An express company is not a citizen of a State, within the meaning of the statutes regulating jurisdiction of federal courts, unless it is a corporation. Chapman v. Barney, 800

24. The allegation that a corporation was doing business in the State of Iowa does not necessarily import that it was created by the laws of that State. Brock v. Northwestern Fuel Co. 905

25. A citizen of a Territory or of the District of Columbia cannot sue in the United States Circuit Court on the ground of citizenship. Cameron v. Hodges, 182

26. A statement that defendant is a citizen of the State, and that complainants are not citizens thereof, will not give the United States Circuit Court jurisdiction. The adverse party must be a citizen of some other named State, or an alien. Id.

27. The Circuit Court of the United States has no jurisdiction, on the ground of citizenship, of a suit which is substantially for the benefit of one defendant, who is a citizen of the same State with another defendant therein, against whom the substantial relief is claimed. Blacklock v. Small, 70

28. In cases originally brought in the circuit court, or by removal from a state court, it is the duty of the circuit court to dismiss or remand the same whenever it appears that the suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy properly within its jurisdiction, or that the parties to the suit have been improperly or collusively made or joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants, for the purpose of creating a case cognizable or removable. Shreveport v. Cole, 589

29. Where a man's sole object in removing to another State is to place himself in a situation to invoke the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of the United States, with the intention to leave that State as soon as he can do so without defeating the jurisdiction of the federal court, he acquires thereby no citizenship such as will support the jurisdiction of the court. Morris v. Gilmer, 690

30. A citizen of the United States can instantly transfer his citizenship from one State to another; and his right to sue in the courts of the United States is none the less because his change of domicil was induced by the purpose, whether avowed or not, of invoking, for the protection of his rights, the jurisdiction of a federal court. Id.

31. If removal to another State be for the purpose of committing a fraud upon the law, and to enable the party to avail himself of the jurisdiction of the federal courts, and that fact be made out by his acts, the court must pronounce that his removal was not with a bona fide intention of changing his domicil, however frequent and public his declarations to the contrary may have been. Id.

32. It is the duty of the circuit court to dismiss a suit, if it appears, at any time after it is brought and before it is finally disposed of, that it does not involve a controversy of which it may take cognizance. Id.

33. Lack of jurisdiction of a Circuit Court of the United States may be brought to its attention by affidavits or depositions taken in the cause; and it is not necessary that the want of jurisdiction should appear from the record in order to warrant a dismissal. Id.

34. Where jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of the United States depends upon the citizenship of the parties, such citizenship, or the facts which constitute it, should be distinctly averred in the pleading, or appear affirmatively in some other part of the record. Stevens v. Nichols, 914

35. Where the original jurisdiction of a Circuit Court of the United States is invoked upon the sole ground that the determination of the suit depends upon some question of a federal nature, it must appear at the outset, from the declaration or bill of the party suing, that the suit is of that character. Metcalf v. Watertown, 543

36. The jurisdiction of the circuit court cannot be maintained upon the theory that a suit is one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, from the fact that it was brought to recover the amount of a judgment of a court of the United States. That fact does not, of itself, make it a suit of that character. Id.

37. The fact that a federal question may arise in respect to the Statute of Limitations applicable to a suit upon a judgment rendered by a federal court does not bring it within the original jurisdiction of a federal court, where that question is first presented by the defense. Id.

38. The proper Circuit Court of the United States may, without controlling, supervising, or annulling the proceedings of a state court, give such relief against its decree as is consistent with the principles of equity, upon the ground of fraud. In such case it does not act as a court of review, or inquire into irregularities of another court, but scrutinizes the conduct of the parties; and if it finds that they have been guilty of fraud in obtaining a judgment or decree, it will deprive them of the benefit of it, and of any inequitable advantage which they have derived under it. Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 680

39. Whenever the claim or contention of a party takes such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting upon it, then it has become a case of controversy, within the meaning of the article of the Constitution defining the limits of the judicial power of the United States. Smith v. Adams, 895

40. The validity of an election to determine the county seat of a county in Dakota, under the laws of the Territory, when presented to the courts in the forms prescribed by those laws, becomes a subject of action within the jurisdiction of the territorial court and is subject to appeal to its supreme court. Id.

41. The designation of the county seat of a county in Dakota, or providing for its designation by popular election, was a matter properly belonging to the legislative department of the territorial government. It was not a matter by itself for judicial cognizance. But when the law of the Territory left the designation of a county seat to the voters of the county, and provided that the validity of the election could be contested by any competent elector of the county, the designation of a county seat, under the law, became the subject of judicial cognizance. Id.

42. In Kentucky when any power is conferred or duty imposed by statute upon the county court, the term is understood to mean a court held by the presiding judge alone, and not in conjunction with the justices, and should be held so to mean even when used in connection with fiscal matters, if it relates to mere ministerial duties. Bullitt County v. Washer, 885

43. The sole fact that the proceedings of a court, as a court of law, are of record, cannot deprive it of the power to appoint by record agents to make contracts and to transact business not of record. Id.

44. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 914, the practice and pleading in a civil cause other than an equity or admiralty cause, in the circuit court, are required to conform, as near as may be, to the practice and pleadings in the courts of the State within which such circuit court is held. Robertson v. Perkins, 686

45. Remedies in the courts of the United States are at common law or in equity, according to the essential character of the case, uncontrolled in that particular by the practice of the state courts. New Orleans v. Louisiana Construction Co. 607

46. Courts of the United States do not lose any of their equity jurisdiction in those States where no courts of equity exist, but, on the contrary, are bound to administer equitable remedies in cases to which they are applicable and which are not adapted to a common-law action. Ridings v. Johnson, 401

47. In the construction of a state statute, in a matter purely domestic, the Supreme Court of the United States will give great weight to the decisions of the highest tribunals of the State. Amy v. Watertown, 946

48. In the law of real estate, the United States Supreme Court follows the final decisions of the state courts. Ridings v. Johnson, 401

49. The construction given by the Supreme Court of Ohio to the statute of that State as to the effect on a sale of infants' real estate of the guardian's failure to give a bond required by the statute will be followed by federal courts. Arrowsmith v. Gleason, 630

50. The right to redeem within a prescribed time after sale under a decree of foreclosure, given in certain States by statute, is a substantial one, to be recognized in the courts of the United States sitting in equity, because the statute constitutes a rule of property in the State that enacts it. Parker v. Dacres, 848

51. On the subject of the liability of carriers, as upon any question depending upon mercantile law and not upon local statute or usage, the courts of the United States are not bound by the decisions of the courts of the State. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 788

52. The question whether our government is justified in disregarding its engagements with another nation is not one for the determination of the courts. Chae Chan Ping v. United States, 1068

53. If an Act of Congress is in conflict with the treaty with Mexico, the court is bound to follow the statutory enactments of its own government, instead of the treaty. Botiller v. Dominguez. 926

54. The Supreme Court of the United States, in cases involving Mexican grants, has no power to set itself up as the instrumentality for enforcing the provisions of a treaty with a foreign nation which the government of the United States, as a sovereign power, chooses to disregard. Id.

COVENANTS.

See also CONTRACTS, 14, 16.

1. The covenant for quiet possession, in a deed, merges all previous representations as to the possession, and limits the liability growing out of them. Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. 1054

2. Where a vendor holding in good faith under an instrument purporting to transfer the premises to him, or under a judicial determination of a claim to them in his favor, executes a conveyance to the purchaser, with a warranty of title and a covenant for peaceable possession, his previous representations as to the validity of his title or his right of possession are mere expressions of confidence in his title, and are merged in the warranty and covenant, which determine the extent of his liability. Id.

3. If the present occupant of land conveyed holds by a paramount title, and thus lawfully excludes the purchaser from possession, the covenant for quiet possession is broken; but such is not the case if the occupation is without right, as the purchaser may dispossess the occupant. Id.

CREDITORS' BILL.

1. Creditors are not entitled to have a judgment against their debtor set aside because he failed to plead the Statute of Limitations to a part of the claim for which it was rendered, especially where there was sufficient in the relations of the parties and in the circumstances of the case to warrant him in permitting judgment. Allen v. Smith, 782

2. In an action by a judgment creditor of a railroad company, to require it to assign to him its claim against the county for county bonds, and to require the county to sign and deliver to him such bonds in payment of his judgment, a decree might be justified against the company for an assignment of its right to the bonds, and requiring it to permit the use of its name for their recovery by an appropriate proceeding at law. Smith v. Bourbon County, 73

CRIMINAL LAW.

1. The crime of embezzlement and making false entries by the president of a national bank, in violation of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5209, for which he was sentenced and committed to the penitentiary for ten years, is an infamous crime, although it is not subject to the penalty of hard labor as part of the punishment of imprisonment. United States, Carr, v. De Walt, 485

2. Imprisonment in a state prison or penitentiary, with or without hard labor, is an infamous punishment. Id.

DAMAGES.

1. The rule of damages, where machinery contracted for has been improperly constructed, is to deduct from the contract price the cost of altering the construction of the machinery so as to make it conform to the contract. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 1035

2. Where the machinery put in a mill is unfit for use, and by reason thereof there is a long period of delay in the operation of the mill, and there is no proof of its rental value, it is not error to instruct the jury that they may allow as damages interest on the cost of the mill for the time of the delay. New York & C. Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 1081

3. Where the broker sells stock of his principal without the directions of the latter, and is thereby liable for conversion, the measure of damages is the highest intermediate value of the stock between the time of its conversion and a reasonable time, after the owner has received notice of it, to enable him to replace the stock. Galigher v. Jones, 658

4. Where property has been depreciated in value by reason of the street being occupied by a railroad company, such depreciation is ascertained by the difference in its value before and its value after the final location and construction of the road. Shepherd v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 970

5. In actions for conversion of domestic animals intended for sale and consumption, the plaintiff is allowed damages equal to the value of the property at the time of conversion, with interest at the established legal rate from that date. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Mann, 854

6. In an action for conversion of cattle, the plaintiff, if entitled to anything, is entitled to the value of the animals, with their increase up to the time of the demand made,—not to the commencement of the suit. Id.

7. If a volume contains matter to which a copyright could not properly extend, incorporated with matter proper to be covered by a copyright, it being impossible to separate the profits on the one from the profits on the other, as the profits result from the sale of the book as a whole, the owner of the copyright will be entitled to recover the entire profits on the sale of the book. Callaghan v. Myers, 547

8. The proper rule in estimating damages for infringement of a copyrighted book is to deduct from the selling price the actual and legitimate manufacturing cost. Id.

9. Where defendants have sold books which infringe a copyright and have purchased them as second-hand books, and resold them, they must be charged with the second sale as well as the first, in estimating damages. Id.

10. In ascertaining the damages for infringement of copyright, a credit cannot be allowed for stereotyping the volumes. Id.

11. The cost of producing copies of copyrighted volumes which defendants did not sell cannot be credited them in estimating damages for infringement of copyright by sale of other copies. Id.

12. The amount paid to different members of a firm charged with infringement of copyright for their services, in the way of salaries, as a part of the expense of conducting their business, cannot be allowed as part of the cost of a work which is found to constitute an infringement. Id.

13. Actual, not speculative, damages must be shown, and by clear and definite proof, to warrant a recovery for the infringement of a patent. Rude v. Westcott, 889

14. Where there have been such a number of sales, by a patentee, of a license to make use of and sell his patents, as to establish a regular price for a license, that price may be taken as a measure of damages against infringers; but sales of licenses made at periods years apart will not establish any rule on the subject, or determine the value of the patent. Id.

15. In order that a royalty may be accepted as a measure of damages against an infringer, it must be paid or secured before the infringement complained of, and it must be paid by such a number of persons as to indicate a general acquiescence in its reasonableness, and it must be uniform. Id.

16. An accounting for profits earned subsequently to the commencement of the suit can be demanded only where the infringement complained of took place before the suit was commenced and continued afterwards. Marsh v. Nichols, 538

DEATH. See ADMIRALTY, 2; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 8.

DEED.

1. A second deed cannot devest the title which has once vested in a husband and wife by a former conveyance from the same grantor, or alter its nature. Hunt v. Blackburn, 488

2. That the grantor in a deed was in a declining state of health and his constitution greatly weakened when he executed the deed does not necessarily imply an absence of sufficient capacity to dispose of property by a gift or otherwise. Ralston v. Turpin, 747

3. Although a grantor, from habitual dissipation or other cause, was in such an enfeebled condition of mind or body immediately before or immediately after the date of the deed as to render him incompetent to transact business, yet if it appears that on the occasion when the deed was executed he was sober and of sufficient capacity to dispose of his property with an intelligent understanding of what he was doing, the deed cannot be canceled on the ground of his mental incapacity. Id.

4. Although the execution of a deed may have been induced by feelings of friendship and gratitude, yet if the grantor acted upon his own independent, deliberate judgment, with full knowledge of the nature and effect of the deed, it will not be set aside as obtained by undue influence. Id.

5. Michigan statutes requiring a grantor's signature to be attested by two witnesses are complied with where the signatures of the witnesses follow a memorandum of interlineation. Culbertson v. Witbeck Co. 134

6. An acknowledgment in New Jersey of a deed to land in Michigan, accompanied by a certificate of the clerk of the county that it was taken according to law, where the notary certifies that the persons appearing before him are the grantors in the deed, is sufficient. Id.

7. Under the Virginia and Ohio statutes a deed by a husband and wife of her land, duly acknowledged by her, is inoperative to pass title, unless he signifies his assent thereto in her lifetime by an acknowledgment in the statutory form. Sewall v. Haymaker, 299

8. A deed made in violation of an injunction previously issued and served is subject to the decree subsequently rendered in the suit in which the injunction was granted. Union Trust Co. v. Southern Inland Nav. & Imp. Co. 1043

DEPOSITIONS.

Objections to copies of documents or memoranda, embodied in or annexed to depositions, may more properly be made by motion to suppress them before the trial, so as to afford opportunity to produce the originals, when those would be competent evidence. North America Ins. Co. v. Guardiola, 802

DISMISSAL. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 70, III.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

1. Congress has express power to exercise exclusive legislation over the District of Columbia; but in creating the District of Columbia a body corporate for municipal purposes, Congress could only authorize it to exercise municipal powers. Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 687

2. Congress did not delegate to the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia the power to enact clause 8 of § 21 of the Act of that Assembly requiring commercial agents to pay $200 annually for a license; and, although by several Acts Congress repealed or modified other parts of said Acts of said Assembly which were within the scope of municipal action, such congressional legislation did not ratify the above-mentioned objectionable clause. Id.

3. The disallowance of claims by the board of audit of the District of Columbia is the same as their rejection. Brown v. District of Columbia, 262

4. A contract for street improvement made with the board of public works of the District of Columbia, to be binding, must be ratified by a majority of the board. Id.

5. Contracts for street improvements in Washington are required by law to be in writing, and the law forbids extra allowances thereon. Barnard v. District of Columbia, 207

6. The board of public works of the District of Columbia could not, by a mere entry on its journal, make a new contract or alter one previously made. Id.

7. An owner of certificates of the board of public works of the District of Columbia, who places them in the hands of a third person, with an unlimited indorsement and as collateral security, and who gives insufficient notice of his interest in them, cannot, after payment to the parties presenting them to the board of audit, recover their amount of the District. Gleason v. District of Columbia, 92

8. The owner of certificates of the board of public works of the District of Columbia, who placed them in the hands of a third person as collateral security, and, upon notification by the board of audit that he must himself appear before it to assert his rights against the holder of the certificates, failed to do so, loses his certificates by his own negligence. Id.

9. Where certificates of indebtedness of the District of Columbia, called sewer certificates, were redeemed and canceled by the proper officers by stamping across their face marks of cancellation as clear and permanent as the original signatures, the liability of the District upon them cannot be revived by its omission to take additional precaution against their being stolen and fraudulently restored to their original condition by effacing the marks of cancellation. District of Columbia v. Cornell, 1041

10. Held, that certificates of indebtedness called sewer certificates, issued by the District of Columbia, were in no sense money or the equivalent of money, and had no validity unless issued for a purpose authorized by law, and had not the character of commercial paper, so as to render them, when fraudulently issued, valid in the hands of bona fide holders. Id.

1. The commercial designation is the first and most important designation to be ascertained in settling the meaning and application of the tariff laws; but if the commercial designation fails to give the article its proper place in the classifications of the law, then resort must necessarily be had to the common designation; and evidence may be given to prove it. Robertson v. Salomon, 995

2. Tissue paper used mainly for making letterpress copies of letters or written matter is not subject to duty as printing paper, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2504, but as "other paper not otherwise provided for," and is chargeable with a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem. Lawrence v. Merritt, 91

3. The Act of Congress of 1867, § 2, prescribing a duty on all manufactures of wool made wholly or in part of wool, "not otherwise provided for," covers stockings composed of wool and cotton. Miller v. Vietor, 201

4. The words "not herein otherwise provided for," in an Act providing for customs duties, mean not otherwise provided for in the Act of which they are a part. Id.

5. Beans, as the term is used in the Customs Duties Act, are not garden seeds, but may be included under the term "vegetables." Robertson v. Salomon, 995

6. Bessemer steel-rail crop-ends, cut off from steel rails, come within the definition of steel, under the provision of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2502, schedule C, as amended, and are liable to a duty, when imported, of 45 per cent ad valorem. Robertson v. Perkins, 686

7. The duties payable upon oranges imported are to be ascertained with reference only to their true and actual market value. Badger v. Cusimano, 851

8. The question whether the collector acted within the power conferred upon him by statute when he required the importers to pay duties, not only upon the actual market value of the goods, but upon an additional value equal to the value of the cases covering the goods, is distinct from any inquiry as to fraud in the appraisement, and may be raised by the importer in an action at law for the recovery of duties illegally exacted from him. Id.

9. Under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1883, chap. 121, § 7 (22 Stat. at L. 488, 523), the value of the charges specified in U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 2907, 2908, including the value of the boxes used in the transportation of goods imported from other countries, is to be excluded from the estimate of the amount of duties collectible upon such goods. Id.

10. Charges for transportation of goods imported from one country, through another country, should not be added to the invoice value of the article to make their dutiable value, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2907, and the Act of June 22, 1874, § 14. Robertson v. Downing, 269

11. The time to protest begins to run when the duties have been finally liquidated, and not from a previous liquidation which has been abandoned. Id.

12. The acknowledgment of the acting secretary, who decided an appeal, is sufficient to show whether any appeal was taken, and also the affirmance of the decision of the collector. Id.

13. The notice of dissatisfaction with the decision made by the collector on the rate and amount of duties may, under the Act of Congress of 1864, be given at any time after the collector's decision and before the expiration of ten days from the final ascertainment and liquidation of the duties as stamped upon the entry. Davies v. Miller, 932

14. A collector of customs is not personally liable for the negligence of his subordinates, unless he has been guilty of personal neglect or wrong. Robertson v. Sichel, 203

EJECTMENT.

1. In the United States courts a recovery in ejectment may be had upon the strict legal title only; and a court of law will not uphold or enforce an equitable title to land as a defense in such action. Johnson v. Christian, 412

2. Where an order of the court in ejectment indicates a general finding for the plaintiff as to part only of the land involved, a judgment for the recovery of such part only is proper, if plaintiff fails to show title to the remainder. Morgan v. Eggers, 56

ELECTIONS. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

EMINENT DOMAIN. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15; DAMAGES, 4.

1. The temporary injury sustained on account of obstructions placed in a street during the building of a railroad constitutes a claim for damages apart from the claim, under the Ohio statute, for permanent depreciation of the property. Shepherd v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 970

2. Under the Ohio statute making a railroad company which lays its tracks upon a street responsible for injuries to private property, the right to recover damages for such injuries is not limited to owners of property immediately upon the street occupied by the track or structures of the company. The owner of property near to the street is entitled to the remedy given by the statute, if the injury to it is the direct and necessary result of the occupancy of the street by the railroad company, or can be fairly attributed to such occupancy. Id.

3. The objection that one of the commissioners appointed to locate a railroad and assess damages for lands taken, under the Kansas statute, was not a freeholder, cannot avail to defeat the proceeding, unless made either at the time of his appointment or at the time he proceeded to act. Huling v. Kaw Valley R. & Imp. Co. 1045

4. A notice given by commissioners appointed to locate a railroad and assess damages for lands taken in its construction, under the statute of Kansas, notifying all persons owning land on the line of the railroad in a certain section and township that the commissioners would proceed to lay out the route for said road through said section and assess the damages, is sufficient notice to the land owners; and the publication thereof in the manner required by statute is sufficient to subject the lands to the action of the commissioners and to warn the owners of property to appear and defend their interests. Id.

EQUITY. See also CONTRACTS, 27, 28; CREDITORS' BILL; PATENTS, 50; PLEADING, 7; TAXES, 7.

1. The jurisdiction in equity attaches unless the legal remedy, both in respect to the final relief and the mode of obtaining it, is as efficient as the remedy in equity. Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 1005

2. The remedy in equity, in cases of account, is generally more complete and adequate than it is at law; and in a case where fraud is charged, involving the consideration of fiduciary and trust relations, equity jurisdiction will be sustained. Id.

3. A suit brought to charge the defendant as a trustee for a breach of trust in regard to a special deposit is one of equitable cognizance. Manhattan Bank v. Walker, 959

4. Even when a suit is based on an equitable title, the nature of the relief asked must be equitable, to give a court of equity jurisdiction. Smith v. Bourbon County, 73

5. Courts of equity have the right to annul and set aside contracts or instruments obtained by fraud, to correct mistakes made in them, and to require their cancellation. United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 450

6. A bill alleging that a married woman has property in her own right, and asking for payment of an assessment on shares of stock out of it, and a bill of revivor asking for relief out of assets received by her executor, present a case of equitable cognizance, where it does not appear that she could be sued at law to reach her separate property. Bundy v. Cocke, 396

7. An action for a cancellation of a sale of a plantation, and its retrocession, and to establish the priority of a mortgage thereon, and have the property sold under the mortgage, is an action in equity, and not one at law. The fact that an action of nullity lies in such a case in Louisiana, where the action was brought, and that there are no courts of equity in that State, does not vary the matter. Ridings v. Johnson, 401

8. Where the appellee, a surveyor, while employed by appellant to make a survey of his plantation, thought he discovered an error in the public lands claimed by appellant, by which it would appear that such lands were not in fact situated on Bayou Four Points as officially surveyed, and induced a third party to obtain the patent for the land, which he, the appellee, then purchased from him, knowing that it had been possessed and cultivated by the appellant for a long period of years,—a court of equity will not readily enforce an advantage thus obtained. Cragin v. Powell, 566

ESTOPPEL. See also BONDS, 8, 9, 11; CARRIERS, 10; CORPORATIONS, 12.

1. When one makes a deed of land, covenanting therein that he is the owner, and subsequently acquires an outstanding and adverse title, his new acquisition enures to the benefit of his grantee, on the principle of estoppel. Moore v. Crawford, 878

2. Where a husband and wife purchased the separate halves of a piece of land at different times, and with the intent of holding in moieties, and conveyed the husband's half to a purchaser, who paid therefor in good faith and without actual notice and for a valuable consideration, the wife cannot, years afterwards, insist that she acquired an estate by entirety, although a second deed was so drawn as to run directly to the husband and wife, and was given at the time they were conveying to such purchaser. Hunt v. Blackburn, 488

3. One will not be permitted to lead another to act upon a contract of purchase with him and incur expenses by reason of it, and then, upon some pretext of a defect in a matter of form, refuse compliance with its provisions, and thus deprive the purchaser of the benefit of his labor and expenditures. Courts of equity, in such cases, compel the vendor to keep his engagements. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 673

4. Consent to a boundary line under a mistaken apprehension that it is the true line cannot, in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, upon the theory of leave and license given, operate as an estoppel upon the claim of a plaintiff to recover damages to the extent of the value of the timber taken, any more than it can, under the plea of liberum tenementum, devest his title to land on which the alleged cutting and removal were committed. Schraeder Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Packer, 760

I. JUDICIAL NOTICE.

1. The courts of one country cannot take cognizance of the laws of another without plea and proof. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 788

II. PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

2. The burden of proof to show fraud in obtaining a patent for land is upon the government. The presumption attending the patent, that it was issued upon sufficient evidence, and that the law had been complied with by the officers of the government charged with the alienation of public lands, can only be overcome by clear and convincing proof. United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 571

3. In an action by the United States upon a bond to secure the performance of a contract to deliver such quantity of oats as might be required, not exceeding a specified amount, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show a demand for the performance of the contract, and a failure or refusal to perform. United States v. Corwin, 710

4. In case of loss of goods during transportation, the presumption as to liability is against the carrier. Inman v. South Carolina R. Co. 613

5. In an action upon a policy of accident insurance, upon an issue as to suicide, self destruction is not presumed; nor from the mere fact of death is it presumed that the insured was murdered. Travelers Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 308

6. The presumption, as between customer and banker, that the securities or property of the customer found in the possession of the banker have been left with him to secure him generally against loss, is a rebuttable presumption. Reynes v. Dumont, 934

7. In a suit in equity by creditors to set aside as fraudulent and void a judgment against their debtor, the burden of proof is on the plaintiffs to impeach the judgment. Allen v. Smith, 732

8. The presumption in all cases is that the courts of the States will do what the Constitution and laws of the United States require. Shreveport v. Cole, 589

9. Probate courts in California being courts of superior jurisdiction, the recitals in their decrees, unless contradicted by the record, will be presumed to be correct; and every intend-

ment will be indulged in their support. Robinson v. Fair, 415

10. Where three things are prescribed by the statute to be done in consecutive order, and all three appear to have been done on the same day, it will be presumed that the statute was complied with, leaving the prima facie evidence open to be rebutted. Callaghan v. Myers, 547

11. Where copies of a volume were delivered, and the title and the work were both of them deposited on the same day, it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the deposit of the title preceded the publication, and that the delivery of the copies to the Secretary of State, as required by law, preceded the deposit of the work in the clerk's office. Id.

12. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the deposit of the title was made before publication, and also that, where the work purports to have been deposited within three months after the date of the deposit of the title, it was deposited within three months after publication. It will be equally presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the deposit of the work, though made on the same day with the deposit of the title, was not made prior to publication. Although it is to be presumed that the title was deposited before publication, yet, where the work was deposited five months and five days after the deposit of the title, it cannot be presumed that such deposit of the work was made within three months after the publication. Id.

III. COMPETENCY.

13. It is no valid objection that the defendants in an action for infringement of copyright were compelled to produce their books and papers on the accounting before the master. They were not thereby compelled to produce evidence against themselves in aid of a forfeiture. That provision is the usual one in an interlocutory decree in a suit in equity for the infringement of a copyright. As the forfeiture of the volumes could not be obtained by this suit, although prayed for in the bill, the books and papers were admissible in evidence. Id.

14. A record from the office of register of deeds of a county in Michigan, containing a certified copy of a will executed and proved in New York, is admissible in evidence to show the will was probated in Michigan, where the record shows due notice by publication and due proof of its execution. Culbertson v. Witbeck Co. 134

15. A declaration of trust is not admissible to impeach a conveyance of the trustees, who had the power to convey the property, and where it appears that the proceeds were to be divided according to the instrument creating the trust. Id.

16. It is not error to allow a written agreement between the parties to be read in evidence without proof of its execution, under the Code of Alabama, unless the execution thereof be denied by plea verified by affidavit. Pollak v. Brush Electric Asso. 474

17. Letters written by the quartermaster for authority to purchase oats, because, as was alleged therein, the contractor had failed to deliver the oats under his contract; and authority granted by the adjutant-general to make such purchases; and the fact that they were made, —are not evidence of a demand upon the contractor, or of such default upon his part as to give the United States a cause of action against him and his sureties. United States v. Corwin, 710

18. Under the laws of Montana with reference to foreign corporations, a copy of the certificate of incorporation of a company in New York, as acknowledged before a notary public, authenticated by the certificate of the Secretary of State of New York, under his official seal, as being a correct copy of the duplicate original on file in his office, is sufficient evidence of its incorporation. Hammer v. Garfield Min. & M. Co. 964

19. Under N. M. Comp. Laws, tit. 40, chap. 2, § 2768, evidence must be given that the writing therein named is lost or not in the hands of the party wishing to use it, before the record of the same, or a transcript thereof, may be read in evidence. Probst v. Board of Domestic Missions, etc. 642

20. Letters written to the plaintiffs by their own agents are incompetent, either in themselves or in corroboration of the testimony of the agents, to prove the facts recited in the letters against other persons. North America Ins. Co. v. Guardiola, 802

21. The seal of secrecy upon communications between client and attorney is the privilege of the client; and if the latter has voluntarily waived the privilege, it cannot be insisted on to close the mouth of the attorney. If the client testifies to what took place between himself and his attorney, he waives his right to object to the attorney's giving his own account of the matter. Hunt v. Blackburn, 488

22. A grantee in a deed is not affected with the declarations of the grantor, made after the execution and delivery of the deed, unless, with full knowledge of such declarations, he acquiesces in or sanctions them. Ruckman v. Cory, 728

23. A witness who has no such knowledge of the marketable condition or rental value of property as would render his opinion of any use to the jury, beyond the merest guess or conjecture, is not entitled to give his opinion as to its rental value. New York & C. Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 1061

24. Where a promissory note is signed "Peninsular Cigar Co., Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," payable to the order of "Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," and indorsed "Geo. Moebs, Sec. & Treas.," parol evidence is inadmissible to show that it was the intention of the indorser, in making the indorsement, to bind himself personally. Falk v. Moebs, 266

25. When a party in ejectment sets up a tax title several years old, parol evidence of the payment of part of the tax for illegal purposes is admissible where the records show that it was raised for such purpose. Culbertson v. Witbeck Co. 134

26. Evidence of a custom to consider as safe a particular port which in fact is not reasonably safe is incompetent to contradict the charter-party. The Gazelle, 496

27. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a written instrument was, by agreement of the parties, not to take effect unless it should be pronounced lawful by counsel who were to be consulted. Ware v. Allen, 563

28. It can always be shown, in a suit at law or in equity, that an instrument produced in evidence was never executed by the person whose signature it bears. Marsh v. Nichols, 538

29. It may be shown that a patent for an invention was never signed by the officers whose names are attached to it, or was not signed when they were in office or at the time stated. Id.

30. Incompetent and irrelevant evidence cannot be converted into competent and relevant evidence simply because it is contained in an official communication. United States v. Corwin, 710

31. Where the rental value of a silver-mill is in issue, and it is not shown by any admissible evidence, it may be proved by showing the value or amount of the ore delivered and milled. New York & C. Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 1031

32. In an action to recover the excess of duties on the importation of goods, evidence that the goods imported bore a similitude to other goods, on which a specific duty was laid, is admissible. Herrman v. Miller, 186

IV. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

33. It is only when an oral agreement is clearly and satisfactorily proven by testimony above suspicion and beyond reasonable doubt, that it will be enforced to establish rights in land at variance with the muniments of title. Moore v. Crawford, 878

34. To make out a case of infringement, there must be a preponderance of evidence in favor of complainants. Béné v. Jeantet, 808

35. The oath of one of the locators of a mining claim, accompanying the recorded notice of location, as to their citizenship, is prima facie evidence of that fact, within the statute. Hammer v. Garfield Min. & M. Co. 964

36. Parol evidence that the plaintiff owned the copyright at the time the infringements were committed, introduced without objection, was sufficient prima facie evidence of title until rebutted. Callaghan v. Myers, 547

37. A memorandum of the fact and date of the deposit of the work, purporting to be signed by the clerk, is sufficient prima facie certificate of such deposit, and competent evidence of the fact and of the date, without further proof of the signature of the clerk, it being on the same paper with his signature as clerk to the certificate of the deposit of the title; but it was open to the defendants to show that his signature to the memorandum was not genuine. Id.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

1. A special administrator, ceasing to act as such, must account for the assets in his hands to the executor or administrator with the will annexed, who can contest the correctness of the account if not satisfactory. RoBards v. Lamb, 60

2. An administratrix who is a widow and heir, by proceeding in probate court in California, may have a settlement of her accounts as administratrix, and a final adjudication of her rights as heir at law in the estate remaining in her hands. Robinson v. Fair, 415

3. Executors and administrators cannot derive benefit from the manner in which they manage the estate. Allen v. Gillette, 271

4. The disposition which a single creditor makes of his debt against the estate, or which a devisee makes of his interest therein, cannot interfere with the executor's control of the estate for the payment of debts, or for partition among devisees. Id.

5. A sale, under a mortgage made by a devisee, of his interest in the lands of the estate, does not withdraw from the estate any lands subject to debts or to partition among devisees, and the executor may purchase at such sale. Id.

1. Under the treaty between this country and Mexico, a person may be extradited to Mexico for the crime of forgery of an instrument, which is made an offense by the Mexican laws, he having been held in Mexico for the offense. Benson v. McMahon, 234

2. A surrender of fugitives from justice, to the State whose laws have been violated, is the only aid provided by the United States laws for punishment of violence committed in one State by intruders from another State. Mahon v. Justice, 283

3. No mode is provided by the United States laws and Constitution by which a person unlawfully abducted from one State to another, and held there upon process of law for an offense against the State, can be restored to the State from which abducted. Id.

4. One indicted for felony in one State, forcibly abducted from another State, and brought into the State where indicted, by parties acting without warrant or authority of law, is not entitled to release from detention by reason of such unlawful abduction. Id.

5. The laws of the United States do not recognize any right of asylum, on the part of a fugitive from justice, in any State to which he has fled. Id.

1. Silence as to a material fact is not necessarily, as matter of law, equivalent to a false representation, but if, with intent to deceive, either party to a contract of sale conceals or suppresses a material fact which he is in good faith bound to disclose, this is evidence of an equivalent to a false representation. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co. 439

2. An action may be maintained for false representations, upon the sale of real property, relating to matters collateral to the title and right of possession,—such as the location, quantity, quality, and condition of the land, the privileges connected with it, or the rents and profits derived therefrom. Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. 1054

3. False representations by a vendor as to his having title to the premises may be ground of action by the purchaser when the vendor is not in possession and has neither color nor claim of title, either under an instrument purporting to convey the premises or a judgment establishing his right to them. Id.

HABEAS CORPUS.

1. Writs of habeas corpus may be used to obtain the discharge of one imprisoned under the order of a court of the United States which does not possess jurisdiction of the person or of the subject matter. Re Terry, 405

2. The writ of habeas corpus may be issued by the United States Supreme Court, among other cases, for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of the restraint of the liberty of prisoners in jail under or by color of the authority of the United States, and all persons who are in custody by violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States. Id.

3. If it appears from the petition itself that the applicant for the writ of habeas corpus is not entitled thereto, the writ need not be awarded. Id.

4. Whether the facts justified punishment as for contempt for acts in the presence of the court cannot be inquired into on a writ of habeas corpus to release a person imprisoned by such court for contempt. Id.

5. The writ of habeas corpus, in the case of one held a prisoner by sentence of court, can release him only when it is shown that the court had no jurisdiction of the offense; and the inquiry in such case is whether the indictment sufficiently describes a class of offenses of which the court had jurisdiction. Ex parte Coy, 274

1. Where one conveys property to a trustee for the use and benefit of his wife, free from the debts of her husband except such incumbrances as, by the written directions of himself and her, may be made thereon, the Georgia Code does not invalidate a mortgage executed by the trustee, by the written direction of her and her husband. Brodnax v. Ætna Ins. Co. 445

2. The Code of Georgia, which provides that a wife cannot bind her separate estate by any assumption of the debts of her husband, cannot be extended to destroy a power expressly bestowed, and render property inalienable which the donor granted upon condition that it might be conveyed as specified. Id.

3. Under the laws of Minnesota the assent of the husband, who does not own the property, to terms of sale by an agent, different from those given in a power of attorney by the wife, is insufficient to pass the title of the wife. Hennessey v. Woolworth, 500

4. Under Ark. Dig. Stat. 1874, § 4194, a married woman may lawfully subscribe for, or take an assignment of, shares of a national bank. Bundy v. Cocke, 396

INDIANS. See also COURTS, 14, 16.

1. The indictment, the venue of the trial, and the jury, on the prosecution of an Indian for a murder committed in a Territory, are to be according to the territorial laws. Re Gon-Shay-ee, 973

2. Under the Act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 385), the crime of murder committed by an Indian within a Territory of the United States is an offense against the laws of the Territory, and such Indian is subject for such crime, not to the criminal laws of the United States, but to the laws of the Territory. The statute makes no distinction in regard to whether the crime was committed by the Indian on or off an Indian reservation. Id.

INDICTMENT.

In an indictment in a United States court for a conspiracy to induce election officers, at a time when an election for a member of Congress was held, to omit to safely keep and deliver to the board of canvassers the poll book, tally sheets, and certificates of the votes, that the documents mentioned might come into the hands of improper persons, who falsified the returns,—it is not necessary to allege or prove that it was the intention of the conspirators to affect the election of the member of Congress, the returns of which were in the same poll books, tally sheets, and certificates with those for state officers. Ex parte Coy, 274

INFAMOUS. See CRIMINAL LAW.

INFANTS.

The provisions of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 372, 373, requiring the appointment of a guardian for an infant, apply to civil actions as distinguished from special proceedings, and do not prevent the appearance of the infant in a suit for partition in a probate court, by an attorney appointed by the court. Robinson v. Fair, 415

INJUNCTION. See also DEED, 8.

1. A court of equity will enjoin a judgment at law if the matters set up in the bill, as a ground of relief, constitute equities unavailable as a defense in the action at law. Johnson v. Christian, 412

2. Where there is no pretense of abandonment of the right to a trademark, delay in bringing a suit may preclude recovery of damages for prior infringement, but will not destroy the right to prevention of further injury. Menendez v. Holt, 526

INSOLVENCY AND ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS. See also BANKRUPTCY; BANKS, 9–11.

1. The Illinois Voluntary Assignment Act in force July 1, 1877, forbidding preferences in assignments, should be liberally construed, so as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy. White v. Cotzhausen, 677

2. An insolvent debtor cannot be permitted to defeat the operation of the Illinois Voluntary Assignment Act by effecting unequal distribution of his estate by means of conveyances, bills of sale, or judgments by confession; and where he attempts to do so, such conveyances, bills of sale, and judgments will be set aside. Id.

3. An attempt to obtain an illegal preference does not have the effect of depriving the creditor of his interest, under the Illinois statute prohibiting preferences, in the proceeds of the property of the insolvent debtor, or give a prior right to a creditor who sues to set aside such illegal preferences. Id.

4. If the legal effect of the written instrument making an assignment for creditors be to delay creditors, it is void. Means v. Dowd, 429

5. An assignment by a failing or insolvent debtor, which secures to the assignor an interest in or an unlimited control over the property conveyed, and which has the effect of hindering or delaying creditors, is void as being a fraud upon those creditors. Id.

6. An insolvent debtor making an assignment for the benefit of his creditors cannot reserve to himself any beneficial interest in the property assigned, or interpose any delay, or make provisions which would hinder and delay creditors from their lawful modes of prosecuting their claims. Id.

7. An assignment for creditors which provides that the assignor shall remain in possession of the property and continue to sell the goods and collect the debts, the collections to be applied to replenish the stock, and which also contains a provision for the renewal of the debts, and that, if any of the debts shall not be paid, or if the assignees elect, they may take possession of the property and dispose of the same,—is void as to creditors. Id.

8. Minn. Stat. March 7, 1881, chap. 148, which provides that whenever the property of a debtor is seized under an attachment or execution against him, he may make an assignment of all his property for the equal benefit of all his creditors who shall file releases, and such property shall be equitably distributed among such creditors, is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States so far as it affects citizens of States other than Minnesota. Denny v. Bennett, 491

9. A statute of a State, being without force in any other State, cannot discharge a debtor from a debt held by a citizen of such other State who does not appear and take part in the proceedings, or is not otherwise brought within the jurisdiction of the court granting the discharge. Id.

INSURANCE.

1. A wife and children have an insurable interest in the life of the husband and father. Washington Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 370

2. The creditors of a man who obtains insurance upon his own life for the benefit of his wife and children have no interest in the proceeds upon his death, although premiums for the insurance were paid by him while insolvent. Id.

3. A man who obtains insurance upon his life for the benefit of his wife and children cannot, while they are alive, exercise any power of disposition over it without their consent; nor has he any interest therein of which he can avail himself. Id.

4. Premiums paid by an insolvent for a moderate amount of insurance upon his life in favor of his wife cannot be recovered of her after she has obtained the insurance, where no fraudulent intent on her part or that of the insurance company appears. Id.

5. Under a policy conditioned to be void where death is caused by intentional injuries inflicted by insured or any other person, no recovery can be had for death caused by injuries inflicted by insured intentionally or when insane, or if he was murdered. Travelers Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 308

6. In an action on a policy of insurance conditioned to extend only to death or personal injuries caused by external, violent, and accidental means, plaintiff must show that the death of the insured was the result, not only of external and violent, but of accidental, means. Id.

7. Where an application for insurance requires the amount of a mortgage on the premises to be stated, an answer stating the principal sum due on the mortgage is sufficient. Hosford v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 196

8. Where the application does not ask the nature and amount of incumbrances other than mortgages, an omission to state that the property was incumbered otherwise than by mortgage, as by a tax lien, is no breach of warranty. Hosford v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 196; Hosford v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 198

9. A policy of fire insurance requiring the interest of the insured, if other than the entire ownership of the property, or if incumbered by any lien, to be so represented therein, does not, if it is stated that the property is incumbered, require a statement of the nature and amount of the incumbrances. Hosford v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 196

10. A warranty in an application for insurance that smoking is not allowed on the premises is not, if smoking on the premises is forbidden at that time, broken by the assured or others afterwards smoking there. Id.

11. Collision or stranding is a peril of the seas; and a policy of insurance against perils of the seas covers a loss by stranding or collision, although arising from the negligence of the master or crew. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 788

12. The insurer, upon paying to the assured the amount of the loss, total or partial, of the goods insured, becomes, without any formal assignment or any express stipulation to that effect in the policy, subrogated in a corresponding amount to the assured's right of action against the carrier or other person responsible for the loss, and in a court of admiralty may assert in his own name that right of the shipper. Id.

13. A stipulation in a bill of lading, that a carrier, when liable for a loss of the goods, shall have the benefit of any insurance that may have been effected upon them, is valid and limits the right of an insurer of goods, upon paying the loss, to recover over against the carrier; but a carrier setting up such defense must show clearly that the insurance on the goods is one to the benefit of which by the terms of his contract he is entitled. Id.

14. Where an insurance company becomes bankrupt and goes into liquidation, the policy holders become creditors to an amount equal to the equitable value of their respective policies, and entitled to participate pro rata in its assets. Carr v. Hamilton, 669

INTEREST.

1. Under the statute of Illinois, creditors should be allowed interest at 6 per cent per annum for moneys after they become due. Goodwin v. Fox, 805

2. Under D. C. Rev. Stat. § 714, it was lawful in the District of Columbia to stipulate in writing for interest at 10 per cent. Wilson v. Edmonds, 1025

3. The United States is not liable to pay interest on claims against it, in the absence of express statutory provision therefor. United States v. Bayard, 159

4. The United States is not liable for interest on moneys unlawfully withheld by the Secretary of State, under the arbitration agreement between the United States and Spain. Id.

5. Upon a bond given to appear in the United States court to answer to an indictment for forgery, no interest can be recovered. United States v. Broadhead, 147

6. Where the master, in marshaling the classes of debts entitled to be paid out of a fund arising out of a judicial sale, calculated interest upon all the debts down to the day of closing his report, the aggregate became the sum of the debt from that period, the whole of which thenceforth properly carried interest. Stuart v. Gay, 191

A State has the right to prohibit or restrict the manufacture of intoxicating liquors within its limits, to prohibit all sale and traffic in them in the State, to inflict penalties for their manufacture and sale, and to provide regulations for the abatement as a common nuisance, of property used for such forbidden purposes. Kidd v. Pearson, 346

JUDGMENT. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 6; APPEAL AND ERROR, V.; COPYRIGHT, 1–5; SHIPPING, 5; TRIAL, 13.

1. A decree, although erroneous, but not void, cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding. Union Trust Co. v. Southern Inland Nav. & Imp. Co. 1043

2. A dismissal of a suit for want of parties does not make the subject of controversy res judicata. St. Romes v. Levee Steam Cotton-Press Co. 289

3. The decision of a motion or summary application is not to be regarded in the light of res judicata, or as so far conclusive upon the parties as to prevent their drawing the same matters in question again in the more regular form of an action. Denny v. Bennett, 491

4. A consent decree that a town shall issue bonds which shall be valid is no adjudication by the court of their validity, on the submission to it, as a judicial tribunal, of the question of such validity. Kelley v. Milan, 77

5. A probate decree distributing to the executrix the estate of her testator, and discharging her from further duties, but showing no adjudication of her interests as devisee, does not bar suits to compel the execution of the will, and the making of suitable provision for complainants as requested by testator. Colton v. Colton, 138

6. A decree of a state court providing for the sale of a railroad is binding upon all the parties to the suit in which it was rendered, until modified or reversed, and is not open to collateral attack by any of those parties in a separate suit brought by them in the Circuit Court of the United States. After the jurisdiction of the state court attached, no order of the circuit court could interfere with or suspend the sale which the state court had ordered to be made. Central Trust Co. v. Seasongood, 985

7. A judgment in a suit in a state court establishing a lien on a railroad for labor does not bind the trustee under the mortgage or the

bondholders of the road if they are not made parties to it. Hassall v. Wilcox, 1001

8. Where a wife has obtained a decree quieting her title, as between her and her husband's heirs and his grantee, to an undivided half of lands conveyed to herself and husband; and has also joined with such grantee in seeking relief, as co-owners, against an execution sale of a parcel of the land, and the rectification of a mistake in the deeds, and the vesting of title in herself and such grantee; and such relief was accorded by the decree,—these adjudications, standing unreversed, are binding upon her. Hunt v. Blackburn, 488

9. Proper notice to minor children appears where the decree recites that due and sufficient notice had been duly given as required by law, and that the attorney appointed by the court to represent the minor children appeared at the hearing and was present at every step of the proceedings. Robinson v. Fair, 415

10. Where a judgment in ejectment does not sufficiently describe the land, plaintiff can, at the time the finding is made, or during the same term, procure its reformation. Morgan v. Eggers, 56

11. A party cannot be permitted to remain silent for more than eight years after he has abandoned the contest for a mining claim, and submitted to the decision of the matter at issue, although it may have been erroneous, and then come forward in a court of equity after the title has passed to the United States, and seek to correct the errors which may have occurred during the progress of the proceeding in the land office. United States v. Marshall Silver Min. Co. 784

12. An order merely suspending the execution of the judgment until the next term of the court, there being no proceeding pending to rehear, reconsider, or modify it, does not give the court power, at its next term, to reconsider the whole case or to set aside the judgment. United States v. Pile, 904

13. A court to which a judgment is presented for enforcement may ascertain whether the claim is really one that it is authorized to enforce. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 239

14. Where application is made to collect judgments by process not contained in themselves, and requiring, to be sustained, reference to the alleged cause of action upon which they are founded, the aid of the court should not be granted when, upon the face of the record, it appears, not that mere error intervened in the rendition of such judgments, but that they rest upon no cause of action whatever. Brownsville Taxing Dist. v. Loague, 780

JUDICIAL SALES.

1. The acceptance or rejection of a bid at a sale under a chancery decree is within the sound equitable discretion of the court, to be exercised with due regard to the special circumstances of the case and to the stability of judicial sales. Camden v. Mayhew, 608

2. Upon the bidder refusing to pay the amount bid, the court, without confirming the sale by a formal order, where a distinct offer is made in open court to confirm the sale to him upon his complying with the terms thereof, may hold him to his bid and order a resale at his risk, both in respect to the expenses of the resale and any deficiency resulting therefrom. Id.

3. Where a purchaser refuses, without cause, to make his bid good, he may be compelled to do so by rule or attachment issuing out of the court under whose decree the sale is had. It is not necessary that his liability for a deficiency on a resale should be ascertained and enforced by an independent suit. Id.

4. Where the sale is directed to be for cash, and the property is purchased on the sale by a trustee of a part of the creditors, the court is not bound, in deference to their wishes, to depart from the terms of the sale, and apply their claims in payment of the purchase money required at the sale. Id.

5. Upon the refusal of a purchaser at a judicial sale to fulfill his contract, the estate may be resold and the purchaser held liable for any deficiency in price arising upon the second sale. Stuart v. Gay, 191

6. A purchaser at a judicial sale, bound to pay specific sums at given dates, is not interested in the distribution of the proceeds among creditors, or in the method of computing interest on such distribution. Id.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. Courts of equity uniformly refuse relief to those who unreasonably delay to invoke their aid. Parker v. Dacres, 848

2. Laches cannot be imputed to one in the peaceable possession of land, for delay in resorting to a court of equity to correct a mistake in the description of premises in a conveyance through which title must be deduced. The possession is notice to all of the possessor's equitable rights, and he needs to assert them only when he may find occasion to do so. Ruckman v. Cory, 728

3. Where a party injured by fraud is in ignorance of its existence, the duty to commence proceedings arises only upon discovery; and mere submission to an injury, after the act inflicting it is completed, cannot generally and in the absence of other circumstances take away a right of action, unless such acquiescence continues for the period limited by the statute for the enforcement of such right. Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 1005

4. The Statute of Limitations has no application to a supplemental bill setting up strictly new matter arising after the filing of the original bill, in support of the relief therein prayed for. Jenkins v. International Bank, 189

5. The right of action of a bank to recover back money paid on a forged check which both parties supposed genuine accrues immediately upon the payment of the money; and the Statute of Limitations runs from that time. Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 342

6. Where the plaintiff is not suing for her dower as such, the right to which accrued over twenty years before commencing the suit, but for property of which she has been defrauded, the Statute of Limitations begins to run only from the discovery of the fraud. Jones v. Van Doren, 1077

7. A bill in equity by a stockholder in a corporation to correct a deed made nearly thirty years before, during a part of which time the corporation was in existence and operation, is barred by the Statute of Limitations and by the general doctrine of laches applicable in courts of equity. Taylor v. Holmes, 179

8. In Louisiana the prescription of ten years applies to suit against a corporation for damages for refusal to permit a transfer of shares on its books. St. Romes v. Levee Steam Cotton-Press Co. 289

9. In Louisiana, in a suit against a corporation for damages for refusal to permit the transfer of shares on its books, where there has not been an uninterrupted period of ten years in which prescription could run, between suits brought for the dividends, the defense of the prescription of ten years fails. Id.

10. The courts cannot create an exception to the operation of the Statute of Limitations not made by the statute itself, where the party designedly eludes the service of process. Amy v. Watertown, 953

11. Although concealment of fraud has been held ground for suspending the Statute of Limitations, yet the evasion of the service of process is not fraud in the legal sense of the term, and is no valid answer to the statutory bar. Id.

12. By the laws of Wisconsin an action is not commenced, for the purpose of stopping the running of the Statute of Limitations, until service of process has been effected, or until service has been attempted and followed up by actual service within sixty days, or publication within that time. Knowlton v. Watertown, 956

13. A conspiracy of the officials and residents of a city, to prevent service of process upon it, by the resignation of the mayor and by the secret meeting of the common council before qualifying and organizing, and by their immediately resigning their offices after the transaction of some necessary business, and the consequent inabilty to serve such process, do not furnish an excuse for not commencing the action within the time limited by law. Amy v. Watertown, 953

14. Where the summons in an action on bonds and coupons against a city in Wisconsin was never served upon the mayor, or upon any person having or exercising the powers of mayor, and there is no pretense that the directions of Wis. Rev. Stat. § 4240, concerning the commencement of an action, were followed, or attempted to be, the action was really not commenced, within the meaning of the statute, until the attorneys of the defendant voluntarily entered a general appearance; and as, at the time, more than ten and a half years had elapsed since the last coupon sued on became due, all the coupons sued on were barred by the Statute of Limitations. Knowlton v. Watertown, 956

15. Under Wis. Rev. Stat. 1858, chap. 183, § 27, the service of the summons, or its delivery to an officer with intent that it shall be served, is the act by which the period of limitation must be computed. Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 1060

16. The limitation of six years in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1069, applies to a claim of the State of Louisiana against the United States for 5 per cent of the proceeds of sale of lands of the United States, under the Act of Feb. 20, 1811, § 5, authorizing the formation of a state government. United States v. Louisiana, 66

17. Where the government, although a nominal plaintiff, has no real interest in the litigation, the defense of the Statute of Limitations is available the same as in suits between individuals. United States v. Beebe, 121

18. The United States is not bound by any statute of limitations, or barred by any laches of its officers, however gross, in a suit brought by it as a sovereign government, to enforce a public right or to assert a public interest, unless Congress clearly manifested its intention that it should be so bound; and this doctrine is applicable with equal force, not only to the question of a statute of limitations in a suit at law, but also to the question of laches in a suit in equity. United States v. Insley, 968

LIS PENDENS. See also DEED, 8.

1. A lis pendens duly prosecuted, and not collusive, is notice to a purchaser so as to affect and bind his interest by the decree; and the lis pendens begins from the service of the subpena after the bill is filed. Union Trust Co. v. Southern Inland Nav. & Imp. Co. 1043

2. All persons dealing with property are bound to take notice of a suit pending with regard to the title thereto, and will, on their peril, purchase the same from any of the parties to the suit. Id.

MANDAMUS.

1. Mandamus lies to compel a party to do that which it is his duty to do without it. It confers no new authority, and the party to be coerced must have the power to perform the act. Brownsville Taxing Dist. v. League, 780

2. Relief by mandamus cannot be granted in equity, but only at law. Smith v. Bourbon County, 73

3. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 716, construed in connection with the Act of 1875, §§ 1, 2, prevents the issue by the United States Circuit Court of a writ of mandamus, except in aid of a jurisdiction previously acquired by that court. Id.

4. Mandamus lies to compel the performance of a statutory duty only when it is clear and indisputable and there is no other legal remedy. Bayard v. United States, 116

5. Mandamus will not issue to compel the Secretary of State to pay money in his hands to one party which is claimed by another party, and the right to which is in litigation between them. Id.

6. When executive officers of the government refuse to act in a case at all, or when by special statute or otherwise a mere ministerial duty is imposed upon them that is a service which they are bound to perform without further question, then, if they refuse, a mandamus may be issued to compel them. United States, Dunlap, v. Black, 354

7. The Supreme Court of the United States will not interfere by mandamus with the executive officers of the government in the exercise of their ordinary official duties, even where those duties require an interpretation of the law. Id.

8. If the Commissioner of Pensions refuses to carry out the decision of the Secretary of the Interior,—his superior officer,—he may be required to show cause why mandamus should not issue, for the reason that, so far as respects the matter decided, there is no discretion or exercise of judgment left. Id.

9. Under a power to tax, not for the payment of judgments, but for the payment of bonds, when the relator in a proceeding for mandamus is obliged to go behind his judgments on bonds to obtain the remedy pertaining to the bonds, the validity of the bonds may be brought in question. Brownsville Taxing Dist. v. League, 780

10. A petition for a writ of mandamus commanding the levy of a tax for the payment of a judgment must be dismissed where the judgment itself has been reversed. Currie v. United States, 592

11. In an action by a judgment creditor of a railroad company, to require it to assign to him its claim against the county for bonds, and to require the county to sign and deliver to him such bonds in payment of the judgment, the only remedy which the company had against the county to compel the issuing and delivery of the bonds was by mandamus at law. Smith v. Bourbon County, 78

12. The United States Supreme Court cannot by mandamus, in a suit in which the amount involved is too small to come up to it by writ of error, compel the judge of the circuit court to set aside the judgment which he rendered. Ex parte Burdett, 321

13. A writ of mandamus may properly be issued by the Supreme Court of the United States to compel the judge of an inferior court to settle and sign a bill of exceptions. Re Chateaugay Ore & Iron Co.'s Petition, 508

2. A brakeman is not guilty of negligence in staying upon a train after discovering that a step was missing from one of the cars over which he might have to pass, where he has been told by the conductor that the car should be removed when it reached a coal yard or junction beyond them if he found on examining his papers that it did not contain perishable freight. Id.

MINES. See also EVIDENCE, 35; PARTNERSHIP, 3; PLEADING, 14–16; PUBLIC LANDS, 8; SALE, 1.

1. It is the policy of the government to favor the development of mines of gold and silver and other metals, and every facility is afforded for that purpose; but it exacts a faithful compliance with the conditions required. United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 571

2. A patent for a mining location of 600 feet is valid as to extent, under the Act of Congress of May 10, 1872. Parley's Park Silver Min. Co. v. Kerr, 906

3. The amount of land which may be taken up as a placer claim and the amount as a lode claim, and the price per acre to be paid to the government in the two cases when patents are obtained, are different; and the rights conferred by the respective patents, and the conditions upon which they are held, are also different. United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 571

4. The term "placer claim," as used in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2333, means ground that includes valuable deposits not in place, that is, not fixed in rock, but which is in a loose state. By "veins or lodes," as there used, are meant lines or aggregations of metal embedded in quartz or other rock in place. A lode may, and often does, contain more than one vein. Id.

5. The subsequent discovery of lodes upon the ground and their successful working does not affect the good faith of the application. That must be determined by what was known to exist at the time. Id.

6. It is not enough that there may have been some indications, by outcroppings on the surface, of the existence of lodes or veins of rock in place bearing gold or silver or other metal, to justify their designation as "known" veins or lodes. To meet that designation, the lodes or veins must be clearly ascertained, and be of such extent as to render the land more valuable on that account and justify their exploration. Id.

7. The existence of a valuable growth of timber on the land does not affect the applicant's claim for a patent for a placer claim. Id.

8. The statute only excepts veins or lodes "claimed or known to exist" at the time the application is made for the patent, and not at the date of the patent. United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 571

9. When a vein or lode is known to exist within the boundaries of the placer claim, the application for a patent which does not include also an application for the vein or lode is to be construed as a conclusive declaration that the claimant has no right of possession to it; but where the existence of a vein or lode in a placer claim is not known at the time of the application for a patent, that instrument will convey all valuable minerals and other deposits subsequently found within the boundaries of the claim. Id.

10. A mineral lode or vein whose location is perfected under the law is the property of the locators or their assigns, and not subject to disposal by the government. Noyes v. Mantle, 168.

11. A mineral vein or lode is "known to exist," within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2333, although personal knowledge of the fact may not be possessed by an applicant for a patent for a placer claim, where its location has been made under the law and notice thereof recorded in the usual book of record within the district, and its boundaries have been specifically marked on the surface so as to be readily traced. Id.

12. Mineral locations made prior to the passage of any mineral law by Congress are governed by local rules and customs then in force. Glacier Mountain Silver Min. Co. v. Willis, 172

13. A description in the notice of location of a mining claim is sufficient, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2324, which describes the claim as located a certain number of feet from another mine. Such mine will be presumed to be a natural object or permanent monument within the meaning of the statute until the contrary appears, where the location is further described by the length of its boundary lines and stakes at the corners. Hammer v. Garfield Min. & M. Co. 964

14. A forfeiture of a mining claim cannot be established except upon clear and convincing proof of the failure of the former owner to have work performed or improvements made to the amount required by law. Id.

15. The sufficiency of the work performed and improvements made upon each of the claims patented is sufficiently shown by the certificate of the Surveyor-General of the United States for the State in which the claim is situated. United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 571

MORTGAGE. See also COURTS, 50.

1. A deed absolute in form, with general warranty of title and an agreement to reconvey to the vendor or a third person, upon payment of a fixed sum within a specified time, do not of themselves constitute a mortgage unless shown by parol evidence or by attendant circumstances—such as the condition and relation of the parties or gross inadequacy of price—to have been intended as security for a loan or an existing debt. Wallace v. Johnstone, 619

2. Where a mortgage does not provide for the payment of rents to the mortgagee during mortgagor's possession, even where the income is expressly pledged as security for the mortgage debt, with the right in mortgagee to take possession upon nonperformance of the conditions of the mortgage, the former is not entitled to rents until he takes actual possession, or possession is taken in his behalf. Freedman's Sav. & Trust Co. v. Shepherd, 168

3. The requirement in Louisiana, that a vendor's privilege must be recorded within the time allowed by law in order to give it priority over a mortgage recorded before it, relates to the mortgages given by the vendee as well as mortgages given by the vendor. Ridings v. Johnson, 401

4. In Louisiana, since the law of 1855, an unrecorded mortgage has no effect as to third persons not parties to the act of mortgage, even though they had full knowledge of it. Id.

5. Where the receiver of a railroad company agreed to pay a lien on part of the railroad out of the money realized from such part upon foreclosure sale, and the lienor surrendered his lien, and the receiver bid in the property on such sale as an entirety, the right of the lienor to be paid out of the aggregate proceeds of the sale is not defeated by the fact that the mortgage bondholders made payment in mortgage bonds, as allowed by the decree of sale; and if the lien is not discharged in money, the property will again be sold as an entirety, or so much thereof as is necessary to raise the amount of the lien. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. v. Newman, 303

6. Where an agreement was made between a person claiming a lien on property in foreclosure and a trust company who represented the bondholders, for the surrender by the former of rights given him by a decree of the state court in consideration of the receiver's certificate for the amount of his claim, the bondholders are bound by what their representative did, and cannot, after they purchase the property under a decree of sale, raise any question as to the validity of such certificate. Central Trust Co. v. Sensongood, 985

7. The Civil Practice Act of Washington Territory of 1873 authorizes the mortgagor, before the sale occurs, to satisfy the judgment by paying the debt, with interest and costs. The right to redeem after sale, wherever it exists, is statutory. Parker v. Dacres, 848

8. A court of equity should refuse aid to a party asserting, under the statute of Washington Territory, a right of redemption, who has neglected, without sufficient cause, before the expiration of six months from the confirmation of the sale, to invoke the authority of the proper court or judge to compel the recognition of such right by the officer whose duty it was, under the statute, to accept a tender made in conformity with the law. Id.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also BONDS; COUNTIES; DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, 3–6, 9, 10; OFFICERS, 1, 2; TAXES, 8; WRIT AND PROCESS, 2.

1. While the power to make laws cannot be delegated, the creation of municipalities exercising local self government cannot be held to trench upon that rule. Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 697

2. The minority of a committee to which a corporate power has been delegated cannot bind the majority, or do any valid act, in the absence of any special provision otherwise. Brown v. District of Columbia, 262

3. The constitutional prohibition of the loan of credit or subscription to stocks without a three-fourths vote is not an affirmative grant of authority to give or loan credit or to become a stockholder upon a three-fourths vote; further legislation is necessary before the municipality can act. Norton v. Brownsville Taxing Dist. 774

4. Provisions in a new constitution, providing for keeping in force all laws not inconsistent therewith, does not perpetuate any previous law enabling a municipality to do that which is forbidden by such constitution. Id.

5. The inhibition imposed by Tenn. Const. 1870, § 29, that the credit of a county, city, or town shall not be given or loaned to or in aid of any person, company, association, or corporation, and that a county, city, or town shall not become a stockholder in a corporation, except upon an election to be first held by the qualified voters of such county, city, or town, and the assent of three fourths of the votes cast at said election,—operates directly upon the municipalities themselves, and is absolute and self executing; and such county, city, or town is destitute of power to give or loan its credit or to become stockholders, until legislation authorizing the election and action thereupon is had. Id.

6. The city of Brownsville possesses no inherent power to tax. The power vested in it by its Act of incorporation is confined in its exercise to taxation for ordinary municipal purposes and the payment of debts contracted in the ordinary administration of municipal affairs. Brownsville Taxing Dist. v. League, 780

NEGLIGENCE. See CARRIERS; MASTER AND SERVANT.

NEW TRIAL.

1. The exaction, as a condition of refusing a new trial, that the plaintiff should remit a portion of the amount awarded by the verdict, is a matter within the discretion of the court. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Mann, 854

2. In an action to recover an alleged excess of customs duties, a new trial will be granted where the verdict as directed, and the judgment thereon, are wrong as to a part of the goods. Miller v. Victor, 201

NOTICE. See also EMINENT DOMAIN, 4.

1. A principal reposing confidence in an agent, and therefore neglecting some source of knowledge which he might have sought, is not chargeable with what he might have found out upon inquiry aroused by suspicion. Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 1005

2. A notice by one purchasing a mill, to one who has made it, that, if the latter does not put the mill in repair so that it will do good work, the former will do so and charge the expense to the latter, is sufficient to cover the necessary alterations to accomplish that end. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 1085

OATH.

In proceedings under the Landlord and Tenant Act of the District of Columbia, oath to the complaint before a notary public in the State of New York is sufficient, as such Act only requires a written complaint on oath of the person entitled to the premises. Harris v. Barber, 697

OFFICERS. See also ARMY AND NAVY; ASSUMPSIT, 1; DUTIES, 13, 14; MANDAMUS.

1. Although the officer of a city upon whom process is to be served may have resigned from an improper motive, and although the creditors of the city are prejudiced by his action, it is damnum absque injuria. Amy v. Watertown, 946

2. A charter of a city which provides that its officers shall hold their office until their successors are elected and qualified does not apply in case of resignation, especially where the law applicable to the city provides for their resignation. Id.

3. A person holding two offices or employments under the government, when the services rendered or which might be required under them are not incompatible, is not precluded from receiving the salary or compensation of both. Badeau v. United States, 997

4. The government is not liable for the misfeasance or negligence of its officers and agents. Robertson v. Sichel, 208

5. A public officer is not liable for the misfeasance or negligence of his subordinates. Id.

PARTITION.

Under the Constitution and laws of California prior to 1880, the probate court could take jurisdiction of a proceeding to partition real estate, severing the unity of possession among the heirs. Robinson v. Fair, 415

PARTNERSHIP. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 7.

1. An agreement by which, in consideration of moneys loaned by defendant to a firm of brokers, they were to purchase for him at a discount a certain class of securities, to be placed in his possession after purchase, and upon their collection they were to reinvest the proceeds in like securities, and the profits received by defendant on the purchases were to be credited on the notes of the firm given for the moneys and interest,—did not make defendant a member of said firm. Wilson v. Edmonds, 1025

2. One member of a partnership in a particular business cannot secretly engage on his own account in such business, and keep his earnings to himself; a court of equity will subject such earnings to the benefit of the partnership. Kimberly v. Arms, 764

8. In a mining partnership, however, a member may convey his interest to another person without dissolving the partnership, or may purchase interests in other mines for his own benefit without being required to account therefor to the partnership. Id.

III. ASSIGNMENT.

IV. INFRINGEMENT; ACTIONS FOR.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; COURTS, 9, 17; DAMAGES, 13-16; EVIDENCE, 29, 34; MINES; PLEADING, 11; PUBLIC LANDS, 16-20.

I. VALIDITY; CONSTRUCTION; DURATION.

1. A patent for an invention must be signed by all the officers required by the statute (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4883). Such a patent issued without the signature of the Secretary of the Interior is inoperative to create any right. Marsh v. Nichols, 538

2. The power of an officer of the patent office to give effect to any of his acts is at an end when he goes out of office, and no efficacy can be given to them by antedating the patent, even though the act be the correction of a mere mistake or omission; if corrected at all, it must be by the officers in power at the time of the correction, who have succeeded to his authority. Id.

3. The Act of Congress of Feb. 3, 1887, for the relief of certain patentees, and validating the letters patent, had no retroactive effect. Id.

4. Until properly signed, a patent is entirely void, and no suit can be maintained upon it; and an action based on the patent, commenced before such signature, should be dismissed. Id.

5. The right of an inventor is created by the patent; he has no exclusive right, and cannot bring a suit for infringement, until he obtains a patent. Id.

6. Only from the time at which the execution of a patent was completed by the proper signatures does the instrument operate as a patent for the invention claimed. Id.

7. The rule that a patent of the United States for land or for an invention can be attacked, for defects not apparent on its face, only by regular proceedings instituted for that purpose, and is not open to collateral attack, applies only to those cases where the patent has been executed and the authority of the officers to issue the same was complete. Id.

8. The department has power to remedy an omission of a signature to a patent, but it must be remedied by existing officers of the department, — not by former officers who have gone out of office. The signature of the acting Secretary of the Interior at the time is sufficient. Id.

9. The only authority competent to set a patent aside or to annul it is vested in the judicial department of the government; and this can only be effected by proper proceedings taken in the courts of the United States. United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 450

10. If a person was aware, when he filed his specifications, asserted his claim, and procured his patents, that the same matter for which the patents were issued had been previously discovered and put into operation by other persons, he was guilty of such a fraud upon the public that the monopoly which such patents grant to him ought to be revoked and annulled. Id.

11. A disclaimer cannot be used to change the character of the invention. If it requires an amended specification or supplemental description to make an altered claim intelligible or relevant, whilst it may possibly present a case for a surrender and reissue, it is clearly not adapted to a disclaimer. Collins Co. v. Coes, 858

12. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4888, the specification of a patent for a process of refining and bleaching hair must describe the invention and the manner and process of making, constructing, compounding, and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it appertains to make, construct, compound, and use the same. Béné v. Jeantet, 803

13. A finger beam in harvesters, which could rise and fall freely at either end, being well known and in common use, and also its connection with a lever by which the driver could tip up the front edge arbitrarily and set it at any inclination, but leaving it free to tip up further automatically, the Graham patent, 74,842, for the combination, in a harvester, of the finger beam with a gearing carriage, by means of a vibratable link, a draft rod, and two swivel joints, so that the finger beam may both rise and fall at either end and rock forward and backward, must be limited to the special arrangement set forth therein. McCormick v. Whitmer, 593

14. The broad construction claimed for a patent as a pioneer and foundation invention in the art of refining hair cannot extend the rights of the patentee beyond the compositions of matter and processes which, as stated in the patent, embody his real invention. Béné v. Jeantet, 803

15. Two years' prior use of an article is sufficient to defeat an action for infringing a patent subsequently granted to another person. Anderson v. Miller, 635

16. A patent which is not supported by the oath of the inventor, but applied for by one who is not the inventor, is unauthorized by law, and void, and, whether taken out in the name of the applicant or of an assignee of his, confers no rights as against the public. Kennedy v. Hazelton, 576

17. Patent 243,674, for an improvement in sectional honey frames by bending and uniting the ends of a blank consisting of a single piece, is void for want of novelty, similar frames having been in use at the time of its issuance. Fornerook v. Root, 97

18. Patent 140,250, for an improvement in ore stampfeeders, is void as not involving a patentable invention, since merely putting rollers under an article to make it movable, when without rollers it would not be movable, does not involve the inventive faculty. Hendy v. Golden State & M. Iron Works, 207

19. A patent for lead holders for pencils, having at the lower end two or more longitudinal slots, a screw thread, and a clamped sleeve outside, is void for want of invention, each part of the patent having previously been used in similar lead holders. Holland v. Shipley, 185

20. In patent 281,640, for an improvement in fireproof safes, claim 1 being for an angle bar for safe frames consisting of a right-angled iron bar, one side of which is cut away, leaving a curve facing the uncut side, which may be bent to bear upon such curve to form a rounded corner; and claim 2 being for an angle bar consisting of a right-angled iron bar, one side of which is cut away, with curved cuts meeting a right-angled cut, whereby the uncut side may be bent to form rounded corners,—the claim in patent 288,136, for the process of bending such irons so as to produce the identical article covered by the previous patent is invalid, there being no exercise of the inventive faculty. Mosler Safe & Lock Co. v. Mosler, 182

21. After a patent is granted for an article described as made by causing it to pass through a certain method of operation, the inventor cannot afterwards, on an independent application, secure a patent for the method of producing the identical article covered by the prior patent. Id.

22. Patent 273,585, for an improvement in fireproof safes, claiming the combination of the frames, the sheet-metal cover bent around the top, sides, and lower corners, with projecting metal bars and a removable bottom plate; and patent 281,640, claim 3, for the combination of the front and back frames, formed of single bent angle bars, having one side cut away to leave curved ends, upon which the uncut side is bent to form rounded corners, and a metal sheet bent around and secured to the frames to form the top and sides of the safe,—are invalid, the combination in each being nothing more than an aggregation, which is not patentable. Id.

23. There is no invention in applying an apparatus for forcing heated air inside of a flask to a cask, instead of a flask. Crescent Brewing Co. v. Gottfried, 390

24. A patent for the application of heated air under blast to the interior of casks, if construed as for a process, is not valid where the only change from a former process is by operating the apparatus from outside, instead of from within, the cask. Id.

25. An apparatus for the use of a heated air blast, having a nozzle which terminates in the air by which the blast is partially reoxygenated, is not changed, so that the improvement will be patentable, by the use of a nozzle terminating in the interior of a cask or keg, by the use of which the blast reaches its objective point without being affected by the air. Id.

26. The application to the bar of the Coes wrench, for the purpose of securing and supporting the step and resisting the strain, of a nut already in use for the same purpose on the Hewitt or Dixie wrench, lacks the novelty of invention requisite to support a patent. Collins Co. v. Coes, 858

27. A wood pavement composed of blocks, each side having a single plain surface, and one or more of the sides being inclined, and the blocks being so laid on their larger ends as to form wedge-shaped grooves or spaces to receive concrete or other suitable filling, was not, in view of the state of the art, patentable April 5, 1870. Brown v. District of Columbia, 868

28. To cut blocks of wood so as to get the grain in a particular way, and so as to avoid waste, requires simple mechanical skill, without involving invention. Id.

29. There is no invention in providing, at the part of the frame of a carriage dash where the foot is to be attached, a bearing surface to support a brace and dash, either by an increase in the quantity of metal or otherwise. Peters v. Hanson, 742

30. Claims 1, 2, and 3 of the Peters patent, 218, 529, which all relate to the means of adjusting laterally the feet of a dash by making several holes, or a long hole or slot, in the lower rail of the dash, so that it can be made to fit carriages of different widths, are merely applications of old devices to new uses, not involving invention. Id.

31. Claims 1, 2, 3, and 11 in the Peters reissued patent 9,891, which all relate to channelling or recessing the rail or bar in vehicle dash frames, so that the metal on each side will be thick enough to form a bearing, leaving that part in the channel capable of easy perforation, are applications of old devices to new uses, not involving invention. Id.

32. The Peters patent 178,463, for an improvement in tools for attaching sheet-metal mouldings to carriage dashes, is invalid because it is merely an adaptation to the application of mouldings to carriage dash-boards of the machine in prior use by Noyes for putting mouldings on combs, in which the moulding was held in a sheath fitting it closely, and having an extension enough smaller to fit the comb, with a sliding follower to abut against the end of the comb, and a slot across the sheath containing a key or stop to prevent the sliding of the moulding, which operated to force the comb into the moulding by the action of the follower, while the sheath prevented the comb from bending. Peters v. Active Mfg. Co. 738

33. The Pattee patent, 187,899, for constructing the arch, or central and main part, of straddle-row cultivator beam-yokes or axles, of curved adjacent bars of iron or steel, to the ends of which the cast-iron parts may be attached by riveting, is invalid because embracing nothing but a mode of construction which is old and not patentable. Pattee Plow Co. v. Kingman, 700

34. Dies which act upon two pieces of metal which are capable of being welded to each other, and which are brought to a welding heat, will necessarily weld them together by the impact and action of the dies. There is no patentable invention in securing the result of welding or swaging by the action of the dies, if there be no patentable invention in the construction and use of the dies to produce a given shape in the article acted upon by them. Patent 281,553, for an improvement in dies for making dash frames, is therefore void for want of invention. Peters v. Active Mfg. Co. 1057

35. In reissued letters patent 6,990, for improved hydrants, claim 3 for the combination of the hydrant, supply pipe, valve casing, and stuffing box, if the casing has no end play, is anticipated by patent 19,206. Flower v. Detroit, 175

36. Patent 282,975, granted to Henry G. Thompson as assignee of Moses C. Johnson, for an improvement in cutting-pliers, is invalid because Johnson was not the first inventor. Thompson v. Hall, 876

37. The Rosenwasser patent, granted April 18, 1882, for a percolator having one end open, serving to both receive the drug from which an extract is to be made, and to discharge the extract, and a perforated or porous diaphragm to hold the drug in place, and regulating the pressure of the liquid by means of a tube from the reservoir to the small opening in the covered end of the percolator,—is, even if it constitutes invention, invalid because anticipated in the Real press, described in Geiger's Handbuch der Pharmacie, published in 1830, at Stuttgart, in Germany. Rosenwasser v. Berry, 628

38. A Canadian patent having been originally issued for five years, but twice extended for a term of five years each, under the Canadian statute making such extension a matter entirely of right at the option of the patentee on payment of the required fee; the fifteen-year term of the patent having been continuous and without interruption,—a United States patent for the same invention, issued during the original term of the Canadian patent, does not expire before the end of the fifteenth year and of the duration of the Canadian patent. Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Hammond, 645

39. Although it may be proper to insert, in a United States patent, a statement of the limitation of its duration, where there has been granted a prior foreign patent for the same invention, its validity is not affected by the fact that it is, on its face, expressed to run for seventeen years from date, and is not to be limited by the duration of the foreign patent. Id.

40. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4887, a United States patent for an invention previously patented in a foreign country, although on its face expressed to run for seventeen years from its date, is to be so limited by the courts as a matter to be adjudicated on evidence in pais as to expire at the same time with the foreign patent, subject to the limitation that the term shall not be more than seventeen years. Id.

II. REISSUES.

41. The enlargement of the claims in the reissue of a patent, so as to embrace machines which do not contain the only new features of the machine claimed in the original patent, is void. Farmers Friend Mfg. Co. v. Challenge Corn Planter Co. 529

42. A reissue can only be granted for the same invention intended to be embraced by the original patent; and the specification cannot be substantially changed, either by the addition of new matter or the omission of important particulars, so as to enlarge the invention as intended to be originally claimed. Pattee Plow Co. v. Kingman, 700

43. The second claim of the Pattee reissued patent, 6,080, for the axle of a cultivator hinged to the wheel-spindle or draft plates so that the wheels are retained in the line of progression by the draft of the animals when one is in advance of the other, is void as an expansion of the original patent, 124,218, because permitting a direct attachment of the draft animals to the draft plates, omitting from the device of attachment the eveners, to one end of which the animals were to be attached, by the plan specified in the original patent. Id.

44. In reissued letters patent 6,990, for an improvement in hydrants, claim 1, for a movable casing which is allowed to slide up and down a space left between its upper terminus and the bead or flange above it, is void, as being an unlawful expansion of the original patent, which contained no suggestion of such arrangement or space. Flower v. Detroit, 175

45. What was suggested in the original specification, or patent-office model, is not considered part of the invention covered by the original patent, unless shown to have been so intended by the specification. Id.

46. Where a patent for metallic bushing for the bungs of casks is distinctly limited to a bushing having a notch to aid in forcing it into place, a reissue, obtained seven years afterwards, for a bushing without any notch, is void. Cornell v. Weidner, 148

III. ASSIGNMENT.

47. The assignees do not hold the property, under an assignment of a patent for one fourth of the net profits, as trustees for the benefit of the patentee; they are only trustees for him of one fourth of the profits which may be received by them. Rude v. Westcott, 888

48. A clause in the assignment of a patent, appointing the assignees attorneys of the assignor, with authority to use his name in the management of the business, does not restrict in any way the power of the assignee after the transfer of the property. Id.

49. A provision in an absolute assignment of letters patent made by the patentee, that the net profits arising from the sales, royalties settlements, or other source, are to be divided between the parties to the assignment so as to give the patentee one fourth thereof, does not, in any respect, modify or limit the absolute transfer of the title. Id.

50. Where a patent, upon the plaintiff's own showing, conferred no title or right upon the defendant, a court of equity will not order him to assign to the plaintiff. Kennedy v. Hazelton, 576

IV. INFRINGEMENT; ACTIONS FOR.

51. After a machine has been constructed by any person, with the inventor's knowledge and consent, before the application for a patent, every other person who either sells or uses that machine is within the protection of U. S.

Rev. Stat. § 4899, and needs no new consent or permission of the inventor. Wade v. Metcalf, 661

52. Where an invention is one of a primary character, and the mechanical functions performed by the machine are, as a whole, entirely new, all subsequent machines which employ substantially the same means to accomplish the same result are infringements, although the subsequent machine may contain improvements in its separate mechanisms. Morley Sewing Mach. Co. v. Lancaster, 715

53. Where one was the first inventor of an automatic button-sewing machine, and received a patent therefor, another machine is an infringement in which the sets of mechanisms of the prior machine are combined, provided each mechanism, individually considered, is a proper equivalent for the corresponding mechanism in the prior machine; and it makes no difference that the infringing machine is more simple and the mechanism is different in mechanical construction, so long as it performs the same function as the prior machine and in substantially the same way, and produces the same result. Id.

54. In determining whether the means employed in the infringing machine are substantially the same means as those employed in the patented machine, the patent should receive a liberal construction, where the patentee was the pioneer in the construction of such a machine. Id.

55. The meaning of the term "known equivalent," in reference to a pioneer machine, is a known device used as a substitute and which effects the same result. Id.

56. The proper construction of reissued letters patent 4,364, for an improvement in concrete pavements, is that the invention consists in dividing the pavement into blocks so that one block can be removed and repaired without injury to the rest of the pavement. The effect of the disclaimer filed was to leave the patent to be one for a pavement wherein the blocks are formed by interposing some separating material between them, and the first claim is infringed by a concrete pavement laid in detached blocks or sections, substantially in the manner described in the specifications of the reissue. Hurlbut v. Schillinger, 1011

57. The third claim of patent 178,468, for a sheath and washers, whereby the sheath is rendered capable of adjustment, is not infringed by an apparatus without washers. Peters v. Active Mfg. Co. 738

58. Patent 140,250, for an improvement in ore stampfeeders, the specification of which requires the feeding cylinder to have chambers or depressions, does not cover a cylinder with a smooth surface not formed into chambers. Hendy v. Golden State & M. Iron Works, 207

59. A blank for honey frames, formed of a single piece of wood, having transverse angular grooves, a longitudinal groove, and recesses, is not infringed by a blank not containing the longitudinal groove or any substitute or equivalent for it. Forncrook v. Root, 97

60. Patent 154,989, for a lifting-jack in which a pawl, in inclined slots or grooves formed in the frame, is pressed wholly by gravity against the teeth of the ratchet bar, is not infringed by a jack in which a spring presses the pawl against the teeth of the ratchet bar, having no slots or grooves formed in the frame to guide the pawl. Joyce v. Chillicothe Foundry & M. Works Co. 171

61. A patent for a combination in a hot-blast apparatus, including a conductor consisting of a pipe provided with a bow-handle, by means of which it can be removed or adjusted in place without liability of burning the hands, is not infringed by an apparatus in which the pipe is screwed fast to the furnace and cannot be removed while the machine is in use, although it is cast separate. Crescent Brewing Co. v. Gottfried, 390

62. Claim 8 of Gorham patent, 223,888, for the combination with a wash-board of a protector located below the crown piece and between the side pieces of the wash-board frame, into which it may fold, substantially as described,—the construction shown being that of a protector having a spring, giving it a yielding, elastic, or resilient function,—is not infringed by a protector fastened to a wash-board by a tongue-and-groove joint, which can be packed into the frame only by first detaching it. Sargent v. Burgess, 604

63. The Kendall patent, 174,684, for runners rigidly attached to the axle of a tongueless cultivator, with plows suspended therefrom, the rear ends of which are raised automatically by the pulling of the team, and lowered by the weight of the plow beams, when hung upon the axle, is not infringed by a machine with runners arranged upon the end of an arm projecting backward from the axle, and which did not work automatically, but are turned up out of the way by hand when the plows are in use, and are prevented from turning by a catch on the arm when the plows are raised. Pattee Plow Co. v. Kingman, 700

64. The Pattee patent for a cultivator axle having draft plates hinged to wheel-spindle plates, so that the wheels retain the line of progression, although one of the draft animals may be in advance of the other, is not infringed by a machine which does not have the wheel spindles or draft plates or side plates on the axle like those in the patented device, and in which the direction of the wheels, instead of retaining the line of progression, turns as the animals may pull. Id.

65. The temporary use of a trowel or cutting instrument to divide the upper course of a pavement into blocks is the equivalent of the tar paper of the Schillinger patent, and infringes claim 2 thereof. Hurlbut v. Schillinger, 1011

66. A patent for a rigid connection of an arm with a vibratable link, whereby the finger beam of a harvester is made to rock either backward or forward by positive action in either direction, is not infringed by a device without such rigid arm, whereby the front only can be lifted, while it falls by its own weight. Besides, the latter species of lifting device is old. McCormick v. Whitmer, 593

67. A patent for a combination, in a harvester, of a finger beam with a gearing carriage, by means of a vibratable link and a draft rod having swivel joints at both its forward and rear ends, which joints have substantially a free torsional capacity, allowing the finger beam to rock or tip up freely either at the front or back; which patent, in view of the prior state of the art, is limited to the arrangement set forth therein,—is not infringed by a machine having a similar link, but in which the draft rod is so hinged at its forward end as to afford no torsional action, and is attached to the shoe in front of the finger beam, instead of the rear, as in the patented machine, and in which the finger beam is pivoted at the rear, allowing the front part only to rise and fall by swinging thereon. McCormick v. Whitmer, 593

68. The government of the United States, when it grants letters patent for a new invention or discovery, confers upon the patentee an exclusive property in the patented invention, which cannot be used by the government itself without just compensation. United States v. Palmer, 442

69. Where the government used the claimant's patented improvements, with his consent, and with the expectation on his part of receiving a reasonable compensation for the license, a claim for such compensation arises upon an implied contract; it is not a claim for an infringement. Id.

70. A bill cannot be maintained for an account of profits received by the defendant from the use of a void patent, because there can be neither legal nor equitable ownership of a void patent. For the same reason, the bill cannot be maintained as a bill to remove a cloud upon title. Kennedy v. Hazelton, 576

71. The defense of lack of patentability can be availed of without setting it up in the answer. Hendy v. Golden State & M. Iron Works, 207

72. In an action for infringement of a patent, an answer stating that respondents are prepared to prove that "Henry T. Miller & Co., and Henry T. Miller," who are the respondents themselves, have, for over four years prior to the application for said patent, used and sold the article alleged to infringe, is a sufficient notice, under the statute, of the defense of want of novelty and prior public use, without further statement of the names and places of residence of the persons by whom and where it was used. Anderson v. Miller, 685

PENSIONS.

1. Where the Commissioner of Pensions did not refuse to act or decide, but adopted an interpretation of the law adverse to the relator by refusing a pension certificate, and his decision was confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior, the Supreme Court of the United States has no right to review his decision. United States, Dunlap, v. Black, 354

2. An agent or attorney, or person instrumental in prosecuting a claim for a pension, can be legally convicted and punished for having, prior to the repeal of the Act of Congress of June 20, 1878, received for his services a greater sum than is provided in that Act, notwithstanding such Act has been repealed, and that such repeal is without any saving clause or reservation of the right to prosecute or punish for offenses in violation of said Act committed prior to such repeal. United States v. Reisinger, 480

PLEADING. See also COURTS, 24, 34.

1. Where a court of equity may grant the relief sought and has jurisdiction of the subject matter, the objection that there is a plain remedy at law should be taken at the earliest opportunity, and before defendants enter upon a full defense. Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 1005

2. Where the plaintiff, under Rule 60 in equity, instead of filing a replication to an answer, sets the cause down for hearing upon bill and answer, the allegations of new matter in the answer are to be taken as true. Banks v. Manchester, 425

3. If the amendment to the pleadings is one which the court, in the exercise of its discretion, might properly allow, a motion to strike the amended pleading from the files should be denied. Jones v. Van Doren, 1077

4. Where leave is given to file an amended declaration, and the court ordered defendant to plead thereto within ten days after a service of a copy thereof, the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment without conforming to the conditions imposed by serving a copy on defendant and giving the time stated in the order to plead thereto. Chapman v. Barney, 800

5. Allegations of a complaint that the plaintiff duly made and filed a protest, and duly appealed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the suit was brought in time, not denied in the answer, are to be taken as true. The word "duly" means in a proper way, or regularly, or according to law. Robertson v. Perkins, 686

6. In an action in a Circuit Court of the United States which was held in the State of New York, allegations of the complaint not denied by the answer are to be taken as true. Id.

7. Where the prayer of a bill is chiefly directed toward securing a right to redeem the whole property by paying off the whole mortgage, but the general object of the bill is to secure to the plaintiff the dower interest of which she has been defrauded, and the bill contains a prayer for general relief, this is sufficient to enable a court of equity to decree such relief as the facts stated in the bill justify. Jones v. Van Doren, 1077

8. In the courts of admiralty of the United States, if a libelant propounds with distinctness the substantive facts upon which he relies, and prays, either specially or generally, for appropriate relief, the court may award any relief which the law applicable to the case warrants. The Gazelle, 496

9. Strictly new matter, arising after the filing of a bill, properly set up by supplemental bill in support of the relief originally prayed for, is not a new cause of action. Jenkins v. International Bank, 189

10. In an action to enforce an assessment against a married woman as a shareholder in an insolvent national bank, an allegation that she was the owner is an allegation that she was the lawful owner and had the capacity to own such shares. Bundy v. Cocke, 396

11. A bill which charges that a patentee knew he was not the first inventor, and that his efforts to procure the patent were fraudulent because he was aware that he was obtaining a patent to which he was not in law or equity entitled, sufficiently alleges the fraud in procuring the patent. United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 450

12. It is not necessary, in stating the facts which constitute a fraud, where relief is sought in a bill in equity, that all the evidence which may be adduced to prove that fraud should be recited in the bill. It is sufficient if, in such bill, the main facts or incidents which constitute the fraud be fairly stated, so as to put the defendant upon his guard and apprise him of what answer may be required of him. Id.

13. A complaint in ejectment need not describe the land by its metes and bounds; and a description by name of property well known is often sufficient. Glacier Mountain Silver Min. Co. v. Willis, 172

14. A complaint for the possession of a mine, averring, after the description of the tunnel claim, that all the lodes therein have been worked and mined by plaintiff and its grantors, is sufficient; each lode need not be separately described. Id.

15. A complaint for the possession of a mine, alleging a valid and legal location by plaintiff, and possession for more than five consecutive years prior to the ouster by defendants, and payment of taxes by him during that time, sets up a claim to a title against all save the United States. Id.

16. A complaint for the possession of a mine, alleging a claim to a tunnel 5,000 feet in length, is not demurrable on the ground that the statute recognizes a right of only 3,000 feet from the mouth of the tunnel, since such allegation would be as good as to the 3,000 feet. Id.

17. Where there is no offer in the bill for compelling a conveyance, to pay the balance of the purchase money, but the case shows that a tender would have been but an empty show, and the court has power to require its payment, the allegation is merely formal and immaterial. Moore v. Crawford, 878

18. An allegation in a complaint to quiet title, in ordinary and concise terms, of the ultimate fact that the plaintiff is the owner in fee, is sufficient without setting out matters of evidence; and an allegation that the defendant claims an adverse estate or interest is sufficient, without further defining it, to authorize the court to grant equitable relief. Ely v. New Mexico & A. R. Co. 688

19. Under the Practice Act of Utah Territory, a complaint which states that the plaintiff is in possession of real property, and that the defendant claims an interest or an estate therein adverse to him, is sufficient, in that respect, in an action brought to determine such adverse claim. Parley's Park Silver Min. Co. v. Kerr, 906

20. The Landlord and Tenant Act of the District of Columbia, providing that tenancies at sufferance may be determined by thirty days' written notice to quit, does not require the facts constituting the relation of landlord and tenant to be set forth in the complaint; but an allegation that a defendant is a tenant at sufferance, and that his tenancy has been determined by such notice, is sufficiently specific. Harris v. Barber, 697

21. Where the complaint in proceedings by a landlord to recover possession does not allege that the complainant is entitled to the premises, but only that he is entitled to the possession of the premises, the difference is immaterial. Id.

PLEDGE.

1. The pledgee of personal property acquires the legal title and possession, and the pledgor, retaining apparent possession, holds as his agent. Easton v. German-American Bank, 210

2. A pledgee may, upon default of pledgor, sell the pledged property, but he cannot become the purchaser at his own sale. Id.

POSTOFFICE.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3962, authorizing deductions from the pay of contractors for transportation of mail for failure to perform services according to contract, is not repealed by the Act of 1879, § 5, relating to railroad companies. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 180

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See also BROKERS; CARRIERS, 2, 10, 11; COURTS, 43; NOTICE, 1; RECORDS.

1. Where one is not notified of the revocation of the authority of an agent, he is justified in acting upon the presumption of its continuance. Johnson v. Christian, 412

2. Gifts procured by agents and purchases made by them from their principals should be scrutinized with a close and vigilant suspicion. Ralston v. Turpin, 747

3. Where there was no agreement that the principal should have the benefit of the agent's outstanding contracts, and the agent, before the agency commenced, had contracted to buy a piece of property, the principal cannot recover of the agent the difference between the price at which the agent had bargained for the property, and the larger price at which it was subsequently sold to the principal, where the latter suffered no pecuniary loss for the want of knowledge of such previous bargain, but got the property at his own offer. Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 1005

4. Where a principal directs his agent to purchase property for him, and instructs the agent that he is willing to give a certain price, and the agent purchases it for a less price, he cannot charge the principal with the larger price which the latter had instructed the agent he was willing to pay. An agent is not obliged to account for commissions which he received from third persons on property the title of which he held as their trustee, and which was conveyed to his principal. Id.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY. See BONDS, 1.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS. See also PUBLIC LANDS, 2–5.

1. There is no distinction as to the jurisdiction of the board to settle private land claims in California created by the Act of March 3, 1851, between claims derived from the Spanish or Mexican governments, which were perfect under the laws of those governments, and those which were incipient, imperfect, or inchoate. Botiller v. Dominguez, 926

2. No title to land in California dependent upon Spanish or Mexican grants can be of any validity which has not been submitted to and confirmed by the board provided for that purpose by the Act of 1851, or, if rejected by that board, confirmed by the District or Supreme Court of the United States. Id.

3. If the description contained in the petition and grant differs from that contained in the act or writ of possession, the former must prevail. If the officer assigned to deliver possession does not follow the grant, his acts are not valid. Pinkerton v. Ledoux, 706

4. The Surveyor-General's report is no evidence of title or right to possession of land included in a Spanish or Mexican grant. Until his report is confirmed by Congress, it has no effect to establish the boundaries of the grant. Id.

5. In an action of ejectment based on a Mexican grant, if, from the description and words in the petition and writ of possession, the jury could not definitely locate the boundaries of the grant, they must find for the defendant. Id.

6. Where the original grant does not locate the subject of the grant,—as, where a certain number of square leagues is granted, to be located within a certain district,—the delivery of possession within the district renders the title complete, and defines the location of the grant. Id.

7. Under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1851, for the settlement of private land claims in California, persons claiming land by title derived from the Spanish or Mexican government were required to present their claims to the board of commissioners created by the Act, within two years from its date, and were bound by a judgment of the board, if confirmed by the courts on appeal, and by the survey and location of the claim by the land officers, following the final decree of confirmation. More v. Steinbach, 51

8. The doctrine that the laws of a conquered country, except so far as affected by the political institutions of the new government, remain in force until changed by it, does not apply to laws authorizing the alienation of the public domain, or to officers charged under the former government with that power. Id.

9. No alcalde appointed or elected after July 7, 1846, the time when the authority of Mexican officials in California terminated, could give judicial possession of land granted by the previous government. Id.

10. A patent issued after the survey and location of a California land claim under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1851, is conclusive as to the validity, extent, and boundaries of the claim, as against all parties not claiming by superior title. Id.

11. To vest a perfect title to land under a Mexican grant, a delivery of possession by officers of that government was necessary. Id.

12. The Act of Congress of June 13, 1812, by which certain town or village lots in or adjoining the then village of St. Louis and other villages or towns which had been inhabited, cultivated, or possessed prior to Dec. 20, 1803, were confirmed to the inhabitants of the respective towns or villages according to their several right or rights in common thereto, was a present grant, at the moment of its passage, of all the title of the United States to such land as had been so inhabited, cultivated, or possessed prior to 1803, and operated to convey or confirm such titles and claims as came within its description. Glasgow v. Baker, 518

13. The right of the grantee, under the Act of Congress of June 13, 1812, was not dependent on the factum of a survey under the Spanish government. A patent to another after the passage of said Act, for any of these lands, would be void, because the government had already released all title and claim thereto. Id.

14. Lands confirmed by the Act of Congress of June 13, 1812, to inhabitants of towns and villages in Missouri, did not afterwards pass to the State of Missouri, by virtue of the Act of 1820, for school purposes. Id.

15. One who claims to have purchased the title arising from occupation, cultivation, or possession of lands confirmed to inhabitants of towns and villages in Missouri by the Act of Congress of June 13, 1812, is not required to prove with certainty and precision the time when and the person who cultivated or occupied that precise property eighty or ninety years ago. Neither the statute nor justice can require anything more than satisfactory proof that such lots had been inhabited, cultivated, or possessed prior to the year 1803. Id.

16. The eastern limit of the boundaries of the Mexican grant called the Moquelamos grant, which is bounded on the east by the adjacent Sierra, is at the point where the foothills of the Sierra begin to rise above the plain, near the line between ranges 7 and 8. United States v. McLaughlin, 213

17. Mexican grants of quantity within a larger tract described by outside boundaries, in which donee is entitled only to the quantity specified, are properly floats, and do not attach to any specific land until located by authority of the government; the Moquelamos grant is of this kind. Id.

PROCEEDING IN REM.

It is essential to a proceeding in rem that there should, at least, be constructive notice to adverse claimants to appear and maintain their rights, before a judgment in such a proceeding can operate as prima facie evidence. Hassall v. Wilcox, 1001

PUBLIC LANDS. See also EQUITY, 8; MINES, 5, 6, 8, 9; PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

1. A person cannot acquire, by his occupation only of unsurveyed lands of the United States, a right of pre-emption to them under the laws of the United States. Buxton v. Trever, 920

2. In case of Mexican floating grants, the land, other than that actually reserved during the examination of the validity of the grant, was at the disposal of the government. United States v. McLaughlin, 213

3. A railroad land grant embracing within its boundaries Mexican floating grants takes effect except as to the quantity of land granted in the Mexican grant; and the railroad company is entitled to patents for the odd sections of the remainder. Id.

4. The United States government succeeded to the right of the Mexican government of locating the quantity granted in a floating grant in such part of the larger tract as it saw fit. Id.

5. Patents issued to the Central Pacific Railroad Company for any sections east of range 6, within the boundaries of the Mosquelamos grant, are valid, there being enough land west of range 7 to satisfy the floating grant of 11 square leagues. Id.

6. Where nothing was done by an occupant of public land beyond his occupancy, and his death occurred two years before the surveys were made, the privilege of purchasing the land was not acquired by him so as to be available to his heirs. Buxton v. Trever, 920

7. U. S. Stat. § 2269, does not give to heirs of a deceased occupant of unsurveyed public lands, who during his life did nothing beyond its occupation and improvement, the same rights which are conferred upon heirs of a person entitled at the time of his death to the benefit of the pre-emption laws. Id.

8. A corporation created under the laws of one of the States of the Union, all of whose members are citizens of the United States, is competent to locate or join in the location of a mining claim upon the public lands of the United States, in like manner as individual citizens. McKinley v. Wheeler, 1048

9. The power to make and correct surveys of the public lands belongs to the political department of the government; and while the lands are subject to the supervision of the general land office, its decisions in such cases are unassailable by the courts, except by a direct proceeding. Cragin v. Powell, 566

10. The courts have power to protect the private rights of a party who has purchased lands in good faith from the government, against the interferences or appropriations of corrective resurveys made by the land department subsequent to such purchase. Id.

11. Where a tract of land is subject to entry as public land, the validity of the entry of such land is not affected by the fact that another tract, not subject to disposal as public land, was entered at the same time and included in the same entry. Cornelius v. Kessel, 482

12. A tract of land subject to entry, when purchased and paid for, ceased to be the property of the United States or subject to its disposal. The legal title was held by it as trustee for the benefit of the purchaser, and it was bound, upon proper application, to issue to him a patent therefor. Id.

13. If the United States, from inadvertence or mistake, afterwards conveyed the title of a tract of land entered and paid for by one person to another, the grantee with notice took it as trustee of the first purchaser, who could compel its transfer to him. Id.

14. The power of supervision possessed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office over the acts of the register and receiver of the local land offices, to correct and annul entries of land allowed by them, can be exerted only when the entry was made upon false testimony or without authority of law. It cannot be exercised so as to deprive any person of land lawfully entered and paid for. Id.

15. The interest of one who lawfully enters a tract of public land acquired by him by his entry is not lost or impaired by an illegal order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, directing its cancellation. Id.

16. The Attorney-General may institute a suit in the name of the United States to vacate a patent obtained by fraud or mistake. United States v. Beebe, 121

17. Misrepresentation knowingly made by the applicant for a patent will justify the government in proceeding to set it aside. The government has the right to demand a cancellation of a patent of the United States when obtained by false and fraudulent representations. United States v. Iron Silver Min. Co. 571

18. If the officers of the land department have acted within the general scope of their power and without fraud, the patent which has issued must remain a valid instrument, and the court will not interfere unless there is such a gross mistake or violation of the law which confers their authority as to demand a cancellation of the instrument. United States v. Marshall Silver Min. Co. 784

19. A bill in chancery brought by the United States to set aside and vacate a patent for land issued under its authority is not to be treated as a writ of error, or as a petition for a rehearing in chancery, or as a retrial of the case with additional proof. The conduct of the parties themselves, for whose benefit such action is brought, must be free from fault or neglect. Id.

20. That one of the defendants in an action to set aside a patent issued by the United States land office is an innocent purchaser of the property is an objection to the granting of relief. Id.

21. The Joint Resolution of Congress approved March 30, 1867, directing the suspension of the execution of the law for the relief of the heirs of John Bouligny, suspended the execution of such Act until the further Act of the Congress of the United States. United States, Levey, v. Stockslager, 785

22. The Act of March 2, 1867, for the relief of said heirs, did not give the widow and children of Bouligny a vested right in the certificates of new location which were to be issued; and inasmuch as nothing had been done by the officers of the land department under the Act of March 2, 1867, and no certificates had been made out, and the whole matter still remained executory, no vested right had attached at the time of the approval of the Joint Resolution. Id.

28. In Pennsylvania, after a survey of public land has been returned more than twenty-one years, the presumption that it has been actually and legally made is conclusive, and cannot be controverted by a party claiming under a junior survey. Schraeder Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Packer, 760

1. Under the Missouri Act to authorize the consolidation of railroad companies in that State with companies in adjoining States, the consolidated company is entitled to the same privilege under the laws of Missouri that the Missouri corporation was entitled to at the time of the consolidation, including the privilege of a subscription to stock. Livingston County v. Portsmouth Nat. Bank, 359

2. Where, when the consolidation of a Missouri corporation with a foreign corporation took place, there was a perfected power in a township to subscribe to the stock of the Missouri company, and an existing privilege to the company to receive the subscription, that privilege passes by the consolidation to the consolidated company, and the issuing of bonds to the latter is lawful. Id.

3. Where the Missouri statute and the vote of the electors taken together authorizes subscription to a railroad and the issue of bonds to a consolidated corporation, no formal order by the county court to do those acts is necessary. Id.

REAL PROPERTY. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 7.

1. It is the duty of the owner of real estate who is a nonresident, to take measures that, in some way, he shall be represented when his property is called into requisition: and if he fails to do this, and fails to get notice by the publication required in such cases, it is his misfortune, and he must abide the consequences. Huling v. Kaw Valley R. & Imp. Co. 1045

2. The owner of real estate who is a nonresident of the State within which the property lies cannot evade the duties and obligations which the law imposes upon him in regard to such property, by his absence from the State. Id.

RECEIPT. See BANKS, 5.

RECEIVERS. See also MORTGAGE, 5, 6.

1. Receivers' certificates issued under an order made after a decree of foreclosure and sale of property, containing on their face a provision authorized by the order making them a lien on the property, will constitute a first lien thereon, if the order is not appealed from. Re Farmers Loan & Trust Co. 656

2. In proceedings to compel a receiver in a foreclosure action to pay rent for use of tracks and terminal facilities, where the amount of rent was left uncertain, a contract between other parties, oppressive in its terms, is not a test of the amount of rent which the receiver should pay; and it not being shown that the sum paid by the receiver was insufficient, the dismissal of the proceedings was proper. Peoria & P. U. R. Co. v. Chicago, P. & S. R. Co. 110

REFERENCE.

1. A court of chancery, with consent of parties, may refer a whole case to a master. Kimberly v. Arms, 764

2. When the parties consent to a reference of a case to a master to hear and decide all the issues therein, and such reference is entered as a rule of the court, his findings cannot be disregarded at the mere discretion of the court, but are to be taken as presumptively correct, subject, however, to be reviewed, under the reservation contained in the order of the court, for manifest error. Id.

3. It is not within the general province of a master to pass upon all the issues in an equity case, and the court cannot refer to him the entire decision of a case without the consent of the parties. Id.

4. The findings of a master in chancery, upon a matter referred to him in a cause, are advisory to the court, which it may accept or disregard according to its own judgment as to the weight of the evidence. Id.

REFORMATION. See CONTRACTS, 27; EQUITY, 5.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

1. A case is not removable from the state court on the ground of citizenship, unless it appears affirmatively in the petition for removal, or in the record, that at the commencement of the action, and also when the removal was asked, the defendants were citizens of another State than the one in which the plaintiff was a citizen. Stevens v. Nichols, 914

2. Where the affidavit or petition for removal of a suit from a state into a federal court shows, on its face, an improper removal, it is the duty of the federal court to remand the suit to the state court. Cameron v. Hodges, 132

3. A petition for removal of a cause from a state court into the Circuit Court of the United States, on the ground of prejudice or local influence, is filed in time if filed before the final hearing of the case. Schraeder Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Packer, 760

SALE.

1. Purely surface indications open to all ordinary observers, and situated on the path which plaintiffs traveled in going to and from their work, and which must have been known to them, are not the subject of concealment and misrepresentation in a contract for the sale of a mine. Synnott v. Shaughnessy, 1038

2. The retention or possession of property by the sellers until, and as security for, the payment of the price, is not inconsistent with an actual sale by which title passed to the buyer. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Mann, 854

SET-OFF.

1. Where a holder of a life policy borrows money of his insurer, and gives a mortgage therefor, it will be presumed prima facie that he does so on the faith of the insurance, and in expectation of possibly meeting his own obligation to the company by that of the company to him; and the case is one of mutual credit, and the insured is entitled to the privilege of compensation or set-off whenever the mutual liquidation of the demand is judicially decreed on the insolvency of the company, although the insurance was not due at the time of the insolvency. Carr v. Hamilton, 669

2. It is no objection against allowance of set-off or compensation between an insolvent insurance company and a person insured against whom the company holds a mortgage, that, when the company became insolvent, the insurance had not become absolute, or that the policy was an endowment policy payable at a certain time to the assured or his assigns, or, if he should die previous to that time, was payable to his children, naming them. Id.

3. The United States can set off the amount due from Louisiana on matured coupons on the Indian Trust Bonds issued by the State, against claims by the State to 5 per cent of the sales of the lands of the United States under the Act of Congress of Feb. 20, 1811, § 5, authorizing the formation of the State government of Louisiana, and to the proceeds of the sale by the United States of swamp lands under the Acts of Sept. 28, 1850, and March 2, 1855. United States v. Louisiana, 66

SHIPPING. See also CARRIERS, 4, 5; INSURANCE, 11.

1. The general maritime law is in force in this country so far only as it has been adopted by the laws or usages thereof; and no rule of the general maritime law (if any exists) concerning the validity of a stipulation limiting the liability of a carrier has ever been adopted in the United States or in England. Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 788

2. The law of limited liability was enacted by Congress as a part of the maritime law of this country, and, in its operation, extends wherever public navigation extends. Butler v. Boston & S. Steamship Co. 1017

3. The Limited Liability Act applies to a disaster to a ship on navigable waters of the United States, although it happened within the technical limits of a county of Massachusetts, and notwithstanding the liability itself may have arisen from a state law. Id.

4. The law of limited liability of ship owners applies to cases of personal injury and death, as well as to cases of loss of, or injury to, property. It extends to liability for every kind of loss and injury. Id.

5. Proceedings taken by the owner of the vessel, by libel or limited liability, are a bar to actions commenced to recover damages for losses sustained by the stranding and sinking of the vessel. Id.

6. The Act of Congress of Feb. 28, 1871, to provide for the better security of life on board of steam vessels, does not supersede or displace the proceeding for limited liability, in cases arising under its provisions. Id.

7. Where a charter-party guarantees that a vessel will carry a certain quantity, but with no provision as to the time of loading, the charterers have no right to cancel the charter-party if the vessel is not ready by a certain day, so as to enable them to comply with their contract with another party. Culliford v. Vinet, 881

8. Where, on loading a vessel chartered, it was ascertained that as she was then stowed she could not take quite the amount guaranteed, and the agent of the vessel notified the charterers that they would take out coal and make room for the balance of the cargo, there being no time specified for the commencement or completion of the loading, and no canceling date named, the charterers had no right to cancel the charter-party. Id.

9. A clause in a charter-party, by which the charterers are bound to order the vessel "to a safe, direct Norwegian or Danish port, or as near thereunto as she can safely get, and always lay and discharge afloat," means that the vessel must be ordered to a port which she can safely enter with her cargo, or which, at least, has a safe anchorage outside where she can lie and discharge afloat. The charterers cannot order the vessel to a port having a bar across its mouth, which it is impossible for the vessel to pass either in ballast or with cargo, where the only anchorage outside the bar is not reasonably safe for the vessel to lie and discharge. The Gazelle, 496

10. A ship owner who is prevented from performing the voyage by a wrongful act of the charterer is prima facie entitled to the freight that he would have earned, less what it would have cost him to earn it. Id.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. See also CONTRACTS, 10.

1. Specific performance rests in the discretion of the court, and will not be granted after an unreasonable delay, nor unless the proof is clear and satisfactory as to the existence and terms of the agreement. Nickerson v. Nickerson, 314; Hennessy v. Woolworth, 500

2. Where the allegations of a bill for specific performance of an antenuptial contract filed fifteen years after the marriage, and the testimony of complainant and her mother, are flatly denied by the husband; and their evidence relating to the interview in which the alleged agreement was made shows that the words "agreement," "promises," etc., were not used by the witnesses in their technical legal sense; and their evidence as to all the circumstances of the case must be regarded as establishing only an honest belief that the husband intended at some time after the marriage to provide his wife with a permanent home out of the proceeds of certain property then owned by him, —no such agreement is shown as can be specifically enforced. Nickerson v. Nickerson, 814

8. Where it is alleged that an antenuptial agreement was made for the purchase of a home out of the proceeds of property then owned by the husband, property subsequently acquired by him cannot be reached on a bill for specific performance, unless it was purchased out of the proceeds of the former property. Id.

4. A court of chancery cannot decree specific performance of an agreement to convey property which has no existence, or to which the defendant has no title, although the want of title is caused by the defendant's own act, as by his conveyance to a bona fide purchaser. Kennedy v. Hazelton, 576

5. In a suit for specific performance of a contract for the exchange of land, the defendant cannot repudiate the contract on the ground that the plaintiff is willing to accept the deed for less land than was originally agreed upon. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 678

STATUTES. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 43; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; PENSIONS; TAXES, 4.

1. A legislative Act may be valid as to some classes of cases and void as to others. Jacobs v. New York, 398

2. The invalidity, as to previous acts, of a general law for the punishment of offenses, does not make it invalid as to its operation upon future acts. Id.

3. Where there are two Acts relating to the same subject, effect is to be given to both, if practicable. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. United States, 180

4. A statute will not repeal a prior statute merely because it repeals some of its provisions and admits others or adds new provisions; the later Act operates as a repeal only when it plainly appears that it was intended as a substitute for the first Act. Id.

5. Where a law is expressed in plain and unambiguous terms, whether those terms are general or limited, the Legislature should be intended to mean what it has plainly expressed. There is even stronger reason for adhering to this rule in the case of a constitution than in that of a statute. Lake County v. Rollins, 1060

6. The general purpose of a proviso is to except the clause covered by it from the provisions of a statute or to qualify the operation of the statute. But the word "provided" is often used as a conjunction to an independent paragraph. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 377

7. After a statute has been settled by judicial construction, the construction becomes, so far as contract rights acquired under it are concerned, as much a part of the statute as the text itself. German Sav. Bank v. Franklin County, 519

8. A regulation of a department of the government does not control the construction of an Act of Congress, when its meaning is plain. Robertson v. Downing, 269

9. But a regulation of a department of the government, acquiesced in for a long time, and by which the rights of parties have been determined and adjudged for many years, is not disregarded without the most cogent reasons. Id.

10. By U. S. Rev. Stat. § 13, the repeal of any statute does not repeal or extinguish any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under such statute, unless the repealing Act shall so expressly provide. United States v. Reisinger, 480

1. The Supreme Court of the United States cannot entertain an original action to compel an insurance corporation of one State to pay to another State the amount of a judgment recovered by the latter for a penalty imposed by its statute upon such insurance corporation for doing business in such State without having first deposited with the proper officer of the State the statement of its property and business as required by such statute. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co. 239

2. The United States Supreme Court has no original jurisdiction of an action by a State against a citizen or corporation of another State to recover a penalty for a breach of its municipal law. Id.

3. The United States Supreme Court has original jurisdiction of suits brought by a State against citizens of another State and of controversies between two States. Id.

4. That a State is the plaintiff is not a conclusive test that the controversy is one in which the United States Supreme Court is authorized to grant relief against another State or her citizens. Id.

5. The grant of judicial power was not intended to confer upon the courts of the United States jurisdiction of a suit by one State of such a nature that it could not, on the settled principles of public and international law, be entertained by the judiciary of another State. Id.

TAXES. See also COMMERCE, 5–15; CONTRACTS, 34; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6.

1. Immunity from taxation is not in itself transferable. It must be considered as a personal privilege not extending beyond the immediate grantee, unless otherwise expressly declared. Pickard v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 1051

2. Immunity from taxation is not a franchise of a railroad company, which may be transferred, but is incapable of transfer without express statutory direction. Id.

3. There is no element of private property in the right of taxation conferred upon a municipal corporation. Williamson v. New Jersey, 915

4. Section 2 of the New Jersey Act of 1862 for the taxation of the poor farm and personal property thereon by the township of North Brunswick was repealed by the Act of 1866 exempting from taxation property used exclusively for charitable purposes. Id.

5. The determination of taxing districts and the manner of apportionment are all within the legislative power. Walston v. Nevin, 544

6. A lien created by the terms of a statute authorizing the assessment and collection of a tax exists and attaches only according to such terms and conditions as are prescribed by the statute creating it. Lyon v. Alley, 899

7. Equity will not interpose to arrest the proceedings for the collection of a tax upon the sole ground of its illegality; there must be some equitable ground for relief besides the mere illegality of the tax. Id.

8. Provisions of statutes as to the form and mode of assessments and the place where the tax lists are to be deposited are designed for the benefit of the taxpayers, and the protection of their property from sacrifice. Id.

9. When the requisitions prescribed for the assessment and collection of taxes are intended for the protection of the citizen and to prevent a sacrifice of his property, and by the disregard of which his rights might be and generally would be injuriously affected, they are not directory, but mandatory, and must be followed. Id.

10. In the District of Columbia, where a special improvement tax has been imposed, the failure of the commissioner of improvements to deposit with the register a statement of the taxes, the failure of the register to place, without delay, in the hands of the collector a list of the persons taxed, and the failure of the collector to give the required notice to such persons, constitute such a nonobservance of the requirement of the statute as to render invalid the tax sale and the certificates thereof. Id.

11. The erasure and interlineation in an assessment roll, made nearly twelve months after it was completed and deposited in the register's office, and after the lots not assessed had passed into the ownership of a bona fide purchaser, is an unauthorized and improper alteration, and not a reassessment. Id.

12. The statute of Ohio which provides for the ascertainment of the monthly average amount or value of the property or goods held by persons during the preceding year, and for the assessment for taxation on that basis, is valid. Shotwell v. Moore, 827

13. Where a person has in bank, on general deposit, subject to his order, moneys, and, a day or two previous to the day fixed by the statute of the State for the assessment of property for taxation, draws out such moneys on a check, receiving the amount thereof in legal tender notes of the United States, which he encloses in an envelope and places with the bank as a special deposit, writing his name thereon, and requesting the bank to put in its safe for him; and, within a week after the assessment, he takes the same greenbacks which he had placed on special deposit and immediately restores them to the bank as a general deposit, subject to his order; and all this was done for the purpose of avoiding payment of taxes on the moneys,—Held, that this was an attempted evasion of the taxing laws of the State. Id.

14. The rolling stock of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company—a Maryland corporation employed in the operation of other railroads in Virginia—is not taxable under Va. Laws 1881–82, chap. 119, which apply only to Virginia corporations. Marye v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 94

15. The situs of the personal property of a railroad company, for taxation, may be fixed, in whatever locality it is brought and used by its owner, by the law of the place where it is found. Id.

16. A tax deed in Michigan is void where part of the tax for which it was given was invalid. Culbertson v. Witbeck Co. 184

17. Where a county auditor assessed moneyed capital and personal property, including national bank shares, at 60 per cent of its cash value, an increase of 5 per cent in the assessment of the bank shares, made by the State board of equalization, is such a discrimination as is forbidden by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5219. Whitbeck v. Mercantile Nat. Bank, 118

18. The right of an owner of national bank shares to have a deduction of his indebtedness made from their assessed value is not lost by his failure to demand it before the completion of the assessment, when the state laws make no provision for such deduction. Id.

1. A trademark must, either by itself or by association, point distinctively to the origin or ownership of the article to which it is applied. Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 535

2. Names which are descriptive of a class of goods cannot be adopted as trademarks, and be thereby appropriated to the exclusive right of anyone. The addition of the word "company" to the name does not create any exclusive right to the use of such name. Id.

3. The designation "Goodyear Rubber Company," not being subject to exclusive appropriation, any use of terms of similar import, or any abbreviation of them, must be alike free to all persons. Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 585

4. The words "Goodyear Rubber," being descriptive of well-known classes of goods produced by the process known as Goodyear's invention, the name of Goodyear Rubber Company is not one capable of exclusive appropriation. Id.

5. The adoption by plaintiff of the words "La Normandi" as a trademark, in his business of manufacturing and selling cigars of a certain kind, cannot take away the right previously acquired by the public in the use of the words "La Normanda" as indicating a particular kind of cigars. Stachelberg v. Ponce, 569

6. Where it appears that, for several years before the adoption of the words "La Normandi" as a trademark by plaintiff in manufacturing and selling cigars, the words "La Normanda" had been used by defendants in their business for a particular brand of cigars, the plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction. Id.

7. A person who was not the first to use the design of a star upon plug tobacco, but who was the first to use a star made of tin, who used a star only a little over half an inch in diameter, with a hole in the center, cannot prevent the use by another of a round paper label over three quarters of an inch in diameter, with a red star between the words "trade" and "mark," in gilded letters on a red background, having beneath the star the word "light," thus forming by the figure and the letters the word "starlight," which is the name given to the tobacco, instead of "star." Liggett & M. Tobacco Co. v. Finzer, 395

8. The fact that flour marked with a certain brand acquired an extensive sale, because the public had discovered that it might be relied on as of a uniformly meritorious quality, demonstrates that the brand deserves protection. Menendez v. Holt, 526

9. Plaintiffs having acquired the exclusive right to the words "La Favorita," as applied to flour, it is no answer to their action to say that there was no invasion of that right because the name accompanying these words, upon flour sold by defendants, varied from that used by the plaintiffs. Id.

10. In an action for an injunction to restrain defendants from using a certain trademark for flour, which consisted of the words "La Favorita," the fact that plaintiffs were not the actual manufacturers of the flour upon which they placed such words does not deprive them of the right to be protected in the use of that brand as a trademark. Id.

11. When a partner retires from a firm, assenting to or acquiescing in the retention by the other partners of possession of the old place of business and the future conduct of the business by them under the old name, the goodwill remains with the latter, including the firm's trademarks. Id.

12. The intentional use of another's trademark is a fraud. Id.

13. Where consent by the owner to the use of his trademark by another is to be inferred from his knowledge and silence merely, it lasts no longer than the silence from which it springs; it is, in realty, no more than a revocable license. Id.

TREATIES. See also COURTS, 52–54.

TRIAL. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 80; EVIDENCE; PLEADING; WITNESSES.

1. The right of trial by jury is secured to the people of the District of Columbia by the United States Constitution. Callan v. Wilson, 223

2. One charged with the crime of conspiracy in the District of Columbia is entitled to a trial by jury. Id.

3. The guaranty of an impartial jury to one accused of crime, except in petty offenses which may at common law be proceeded against summarily, secures to him the right to a jury trial the first time and in whatever court he is put on trial. Id.

4. A trial by jury in an appellate court, after conviction and sentence in the court of original jurisdiction without a jury, does not satisfy the Constitution. Id.

5. The remission by plaintiff of a part of the verdict, followed by a judgment for the remaining sum, as a condition of the denial of a new trial, does not deprive the defendant of his constitutional right to have the question of damages tried by a jury, or constitute a reexamination of the facts tried by a jury, in violation of the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Arkansas Valley Land & Cattle Co. v. Mann, 854

6. The Act of Congress of June 30, 1879, chap. 52 § 2 (21 Stat. at L. 43), as to drawing of jurors, does not touch the power of the court, whenever the panel of jurors is exhausted, to call in talesmen from the bystanders to supply the deficiency, and does not, either expressly or by implication, repeal U. S. Rev. Stat. § 804, relating to that subject. Lovejoy v. United States, 389

7. The absence of counsel while the court is in session, at any time between the impaneling of the jury and the return of the verdict, cannot limit the power and duty of the judge to instruct the jury in open court on the law of the case as occasion may require, or dispense with the necessity of excepting to his rulings and instructions, or give jurisdiction to a court of error to decide questions not appearing of record. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co. 439

8. A court of the United States, in submitting a case to the jury, may express its opinion upon the facts, if no rule is incorrectly stated and all matters of fact are ultimately submitted to the determination of the jury. Lovejoy v. United States, 389; Rucker v. Wheeler, 102

9. The judge may properly explain to the jury the effect of different portions of the evidence; and if the jury find a verdict against plain evidence, their verdict will be set aside. Pinkerton v. Ledoux, 706

10. Where it is conceded that defendant railroad company is in fault on account of running its trains at a high rate of speed, and of the imperfect condition of brakes, the court is not justified in refusing to submit to the jury an action for damages by reason of plaintiff's acts, which show in some degree that he was not as careful as the most cautious and prudent man would have been. Jones v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 478

11. It is error to give instructions to the jury applicable to evidence not admitted. New York & C. Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 1031

12. On a conviction for murder in the first degree, in Utah, the court erred in not directing the attention of the jury to the provision of the Penal Code as to their right to recommend imprisonment for life at hard labor in the penitentiary, in place of the punishment of death. By such action of the court the prisoner was deprived of a substantial right. Calton v. Utah, 870

13. Where, on account of an amendment of the declaration, it remains without an answer, the plaintiff may move for a judgment for want of an answer; but a jury cannot be called and verdict entered where no issue is joined, unless for assessment of damages merely. Chapman v. Barney, 800

14. In order to locate a grant of land, there must be evidence to show that the place of location agrees with the description in the grant; and that evidence is for the jury. Pinkerton v. Ledoux, 706

15. The question of contributory negligence should be submitted to the jury where the conclusion does not follow, as matter of law, that no recovery can be had upon any view which can be properly taken of the facts which the evidence tends to establish. Dunlap v. Northeastern R. Co. 1058

16. Whether a brakeman was guilty of contributory negligence in forgetting or not recalling the fact that a step was missing from a car over which he attempted to let himself down, when he was hastening to his duty through a severe storm, is a question for the jury. Kane v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 339

17. In an action for damages for death caused, in a collision, by the negligence of the owner of a vessel on which it was claimed the deceased was a passenger, where there is no evidence that he was drowned as a consequence of the collision, or as to what caused his death, submitting the question as to whether he lost his life in consequence of the collision to the jury is at most all the plaintiff can ask. Providence & S. Steamship Co. v. Clare, 199

18. Where a person having business in a railroad depot passed out in the usual way and was struck, between the walls of the depot and a passenger platform on the other side of the tracks, by a train which was shut from his view by a car on the side track, and which he did not hear although he listened for it, and there was evidence that the noise was great about the place of exit, while there is other testimony to show that he ran from the depot carelessly,—the question of his contributory negligence is for the jury. Jones v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 478

19. In an action to recover an excess of duties on the importation of goods, the similitude of the goods to other goods in the market on which a specific duty was laid should have been submitted to the jury under proper instructions. Herrman v. Miller, 186

20. Where the amount of coupons has been paid, the question whether it was intended as a payment or a purchase of the coupons is one of fact, rather than of law, to be settled by the evidence. Wood v. Guarantee Trust & Safe Deposit Co. 472

21. Where defendant pleaded the bar of the Wisconsin ten years' Statute of Limitations, the questions whether a box in the clerk's office had been duly designated by the marshal as a place where processes to be served by him should be deposited, and whether the summons was either deposited by the clerk in that box, or delivered by him to the marshal, within ten years after May 13, 1862, when the cause of action accrued,—were not questions of law for the court, but questions of fact which should have been submitted to the jury. Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 1080

22. A paper handed to a witness, and read and used by him as a memorandum with which to refresh his recollection, is not thereby admitted in evidence. New York & C. Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 1031

1. A trustee cannot become a purchaser at his own sale, without special permission from a court of competent jurisdiction. Allen v. Gillette, 271

2. In Texas a trustee may purchase the trust property at a judicial sale brought about by a third person, which he had no part in procuring and over which he could not have had control. Id.

3. A creditor secured by a deed of trust to a stranger as trustee may become a purchaser at a sale by the trustee. Easton v. German-American Bank, 210

4. It is otherwise where real estate is conveyed by a debtor directly to a creditor, as security for his debt, with power of sale in case of default. Id.

5. Where a creditor becomes the purchaser at a sale under a deed of trust made to a third person as trustee, and credits the debtor on the overdue obligation with the amount of the purchase money, it is in fact and law a payment to the use and benefit of the debtor. Id.

6. Whenever property charged with a trust is conveyed to a third party with notice, he will hold it subject to that trust, which he may be compelled to perform equally with the former owner. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 678

7. Where one defendant obtained a conveyance of the plaintiff's dower interest by fraud, and held that interest in trust for her, a code-

fendant taking the property with full notice is equally affected by the fraud and bound by the trust. Jones v. Van Doren, 1077

8. One who by fraudulent misrepresentations obtains a conveyance from the owner of any interest in property, real or personal, is in equity a trustee ex maleficio for the person defrauded; and anyone taking the property from such trustee with notice of the fraud and of the consequent trust is affected by the trust. Id.

9. Whenever the legal title to property is obtained through means or under circumstances which render it unconscientious for the holder of the legal title to retain and enjoy the beneficial interest, equity impresses a constructive trust on the property thus acquired, in favor of the one who is truly and equitably entitled to the same. Moore v. Crawford, 878

10. Where a person has received a conveyance of land, and conveys the same to another with covenant of warranty, and subsequently induces his grantors to convey the same lands to his wife, on the destruction or loss of his own deed, for the avowed purpose of avoiding the deed he has given to such other person, the wife, being fully advised of the purpose and paying no consideration for the conveyance, is to be treated as a party to the fraud, and held as trustee ex maleficio; and she may be compelled to convey to her husband's grantee. Id.

11. A court of equity has jurisdiction to reach property fraudulently acquired, either in the hands of the original wrongdoer, or in the hands of any subsequent holder, until a purchaser of it in good faith and without notice acquires a higher right and takes the property relieved from the trust. Id.

12. When a trustee dealing with the trust property, together with property of his own, as one mass, conveys part of the whole to a purchaser who takes it for value, in good faith, without notice of the fraud or of the trust, and who therefore acquires a good title, the question how far the rest of the property shall be charged with the trust so as fully to indemnify the person defrauded can only be determined in a court of equity. Jones v. Van Doren, 1077

WILLS.

1. The construction of a will is governed by the intention of the testator, when not inconsistent with the rules of law. Colton v. Colton, 138

2. No technical language is necessary to the creation of a trust; and a devise accompanied by words imperative, expressing a wish or recommendation that devisee will apply it to the benefit of others, may create a trust. Id.

3. A clause in a will giving the widow all of testator's estate, and recommending to her the care and protection of his mother and sister, and requesting her to make such gift and provision for them as in her judgment will be best, gives the mother and sister a beneficial interest out of the estate given to the widow, to the extent of a permanent provision during life, suitable and sufficient for their care and protection, having regard to their condition and necessities and to the amount of the fund; and it is the duty of the court to determine what provision would be suitable and best under the circumstances, and the details for securing and paying it. Id.

4. The provision is not void for uncertainty, or as involving discretionary power on the part of the trustee. Id.

Mfg. Co.* v. Phelps, 1085

2. In U. S. Rev. Stat. § 858, in regard to the competency of witnesses, the words "in all other respects" mean "in all other respects" than those provided for in so much of the section as precedes the word "provided," and do not qualify the clause which forms the proviso. Goodwin v. Fox, 805
